Pakistan Authorities Put Benazir Bhutto Under House Arrest

By James Rupert

Washington Post Service
PESHAWAR, Pakistan — Pakistan's martial law administration placed Benazir Bhutto, the prominent opposition leader, under house arrest Thursday, eight days after she returned from self-inposed exile. The move appeared to signal the government's intention to maintain tight controls on all domestic political activity.

Armed police surrounded the Bhutto family home in Karachi, and ordered supporters of Miss Bhutto's Pakistan People's Party, who gathered outside the villa, to disperse. Although Miss Bhutto's arrest was not officially announced, police and government officials in Karachi and the capital, Islamabad, said she would be confined to her home for 90 days, and would not be permitted to meet anyone outside her household.

Miss Bhutto's arrest, after she returned for the funeral of her brother last week, indicated the military government's apparent determination to prevent spontane-ous political activity while it manages a caunous evolution toward limited civilian rule. Opposition politicians said the arrest also damaged the credibility of those civilian politicians who have cooperated with the military's plan to hand power to a civil administration.

Some Western observers suggested that Miss Bhutto may, in the government's eyes, have violated a tacit agreement in which she was widely regarded as a primary politipermitted to return to Pakistan cal challenge to General Zia's plan freely but was not to be politically to return the country to civilian

Flick Political Payoff Trial Opens in Bonn

By James M. Markham

New York Times Service BONN - Otto Lambsdorff, who until last year was West Germany's economics minister, went on trial Thursday with two other defendants accused of corruption in connection with the nation's biggest political payoff scandal.

Two of the defendants are charged with accepting 510,000 marks ($190,000) in bribes for the Free Democratic Party while they were ministers in a coalition cabinet led by the Social Democrats.

Mr. Lambsdorff, a senior figure in the small Free Democratic Party and still a member of parliament, is accused of accepting $50,000 between 1977 and 1980 from the giant Flick holding corporation in return for granting hicrative tax waivers. By James M. Markham New York Times Service

BONN - A major spy scandal took fresh turns Thursday with the disclosures that a high-ranking West German counterintelligence officer had been detained for questioning and that a senior East German diplomat had defected to

The Federal Prosecutor's office in Karlsruhe disclosed that Reinhard Liebetanz, 48, an officer in the Cologne-based counterintelligence agency, had been detained and questioned about a 10-year friendship with an East German agent.

Mr. Liebetanz was later released. Later in the day, a government spokesman said that Martin Winkler, the East German chargé d'affaires in Buenos Aires, had defected to West Germany.

It appeared that Mr. Winkler may have been an undercover agent for West Germany who fled his post after the reported defection to East Germany last week of Hans Joachim Tiedge, a counterintelligence officer at the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution in Cologne. Mr. Liebetanz, according to the prosecutor's office, had been a close friend for a decade of Eberhard Severin, an East German agent who was infiltrated into West Germany in the 1960s. Mr. Severin worked in Cologne for an electrical company, but at tered to move to Vienna.

Earlier this week, Mr. Liebetanz told his superiors in the government that while he was on vacation in Austria this month Mr. Severin and a third man — assumed to be an East German agent — had put him under "massive pressure" to said Thursday that an investigation of Mr. Liebetanz was continuing but that his story "appeared to be true" and that the officer had been unaware that Mr. Severin was an East German agent.

"There is no pressing suspicion against him," Mr. Prechtel said. A spokesman for the Austrian Interior Ministry in Vienna said that an arrest warrant had been issued for Mr. Severin and that there was reason to believe he was still in the country. Other accounts said he had es caped to East Germany.

The 2,000-member Office for the Protection of the Constitution is concerned with both espionage by foreign governments and domestic threats such as terrorism. Mr. Liebetanz is a specialist in far-right Jürgen Sudhoff, a government spokesman, insisted that the defection of Mr. Winkler, the East German diplomat, was unrelated to the Tiedge case; he characterized the defector as an expert on Latin America who had served in Cuba.

From various sources, it appeared that he had surfaced in Bonn on Aug. 25. or two days after Mr. Tiedge's defection was announced by the East German press agency.

The last spectacular defection from East Germany was in 1979 when Werner Stiller, a top-ranking agent, crossed into West Berlin with his wife and child. He betrayed scores of East German spies in West Germany who then were arrested.

Since the beginning of the month, two Bonn secretaries and an army messenger have disappeared from their posts and are selieved by the authorities to have fled to East Berlin.

MITCHELL'S PLAIN, South Africa — At least 11 more people were killed in political unrest Thursday as black and mixed-race townships of the Cape Town area erupted in violence for the second straight day.

The death toll around Cape Town has reached at least 16 in two days of mass protests against the white-minority government and harsh police response. Three other deaths were reported in separate incidents elsewhere in a fresh round of the political violence that has claimed more than 650 lives in the past year.

Policemen and soldiers struggled throughout the day to enforce order over a widespread area, firing shotguns, rubber bullets and tear gas at roving bands of residents who pelted them with stones, bottles and gasoline bombs.

But the rioting that began Wednesday in two townships after the police broke up a series of illegal but peaceful demonstrations spread like a brush fire Thursday to neighboring communities.

Angry mobs set up hundreds of makeshift barricades of burning tires, mattresses and refuse to block police access to the rubble-strewn streets. Columns of black smoke mingled with clouds of tear gas throughout the area. By nightfall security forces still were battling residents in at least six townships, all of which had been cordoned off to the press and public by ministerial order. Witnesses described a vast ring of fire they said was visible over a large area east of the city. Fire engines and ambulances refused to enter the area for fear of attack.

Like on Wednesday, most of the deaths occurred in the black townships of Guguletu and Nyanga, where the police again opened fire with shotguns and rubber bullets on stone-throwing crowds.

Among the dead was a 3-yearold boy killed when his house was set aftre with a gasoline bomb, according to the state-run television network. The police reported 89

But at least three people were killed in the mixed-race or "colored" township of Mitchell's Plain, a relatively affluent area of houses and shops that, until Thursday, had been untouched by the violence. By inightfall it too was ablaze, with angry youths challenging police vehicles with stones and bottles and dodging police bullets. At least five public schools here and in nearby Mannenburg town-ship were also turned into battlegrounds. Policemen stormed school grounds to disperse protesting students, according to the South Afri-can Press Association. The association said that local reporters had seen policemen firing shotgun rounds toward one Mitchell's Plain elementary school and lobbing tear gas into the grounds of at least four high schools. Classrooms at one Mannenburg school were damaged by fire.

At a Methodist day care center in Mitchell's Plain, witnesses said that workers had frantically rounded up small children and bundled them into the building as clouds of tear gas wafted over the yard. Hundreds of students marched from the University of the Western Cape toward the house of the Reverend Allan Boesak. The mixed race cleric was detained without

Tactics of an East German Spymaster: Defections, Seductions, Stolen Identities

By William Drozdiak

BONN -He is often cited as the fictional spymaster. But to Western intelligence experts, the exploits of Markus Wolf, East Germany's chief of foreign espionage for the past three decades, are all too real.

The defection last week of one of Bonn's top counterspies. Hans Jo-achim Tiedge, is the latest of the espionage coups that remind West German authorities of the vulnerability of their society to the Communist superspy.

Renowned as an innovator in a rigid totalitarian system, Mr. Wolf has been aided inestimably by Bonn's open-door policy to German refugees and the common language and culture linking two states across the East-West divide. At least 3,000 spies are believed to have infiltrated West German institutions, with thousands of other informers poised to serve East Berlin, according to Interior Ministry officials in Bonn.

Mr. Wolf was raised in the Stuttgart area of what is now West Germany by Communist parents who fled to the Soviet Union when the

Mr. Wolf was placed in charge of foreign intelligence operations. In that role, he has earned the grudging respect of his opponents ige in the West.

Wolf has a lot of brains, experience and patience," said a Western intelligence official. "But most of all, he's got the cards stacked in his favor in dealing with an open society in the same language.

Mr. Wolf also has endured a few blows to his prestige. In 1979, Werner Stiller, a lieutenant in East German intelligence and one of Mr. Woll's bright young protegés, de-fected to the West, Mr. Stiller, then 31, had been active in supervising agents in Western nuclear centers, ty, the intelligence apparatus that among other places. Nonetheless, Mr. Wolf's reputa-Tiedge, that he remains the obvious choice to become head of the entire Ministry of State Security after Erich Mielke, who is 78 and ailing, steps down.

Mr. Wolf's most clever tactic, according to intelligence sources, is a refinement of forged identity called "seamless penetration." From the 1,000 to 2,000 West Germans who move to East Germany every year, Mr. Wolf's department confiscates identity papers and turns them over to agents who then enter West Germany through a third country, Sweden, France and Canada are described as favored

The spy entering West Germany simply renews with the West German police the canceled registration of the West German who has left the country. The spy faces no risk of a computer spotting flaws in forged documents, and he enters with a clean background.

Two of the spy suspects who vanished from Bonn in recent weeks were ascertained to have settled in West Germany in this manner. One was Sonja Lüneburg, the private secretary of Economics Minister Martin Bangemann, who had assumed the identity of a West Berlin hairdresser before coming to Bonn from Colmar, France, nearly two decades ago.
In addition, Mr. Wolf's spies are eccomplished at persuading Bonn secretaries to betray classified material in return for pledges of love or marriage. These spies are known to cruise Bonn bars on weekends

Bulkhead Cited in Japan Air Crash

TOKYO (UPI) - The U.S. team investigating the Aug. 12 crash of a Japan Air Lines jet is almost certain that a pressure wall known as a bulkhead in the rear cabin failed, causing the Boeing 747's tail to burst. sources said Thursday.

The investigative sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said that part of the bulkhead was replaced after an accident in 1978, and the seam joining the new section was found to have separated. They said that U.S. officials were "80 percent" sure that the bulkhead split open before the crash.

Flight 123 was en route from Tokyo to Osaka when it crashed into a mountain in central Japan, killing 520 people. A Japanese government report released Tuesday said the accident began with an "abnormal impact" in the tail and the sudden depressurization of the cabin.

Colombian Troops Kill Rebel Leader

BOGOTA (Reuters) - Colombian troops have killed a leader of the leftist guerrilla April 19 Movement, or M-19, in what military sources said was the most serious blow to the group in several years.

General Rafael Forero, chief of the army, said that Ivan Marino Ospina and three bodyguards were killed Wednesday in a gun battle with troops who raided an apartment in the city of Cali, 278 miles (450 kilometers) southeast of Bogota.

The sources said that Mr. Marino Ospina, military chief of M-19 and a * member of its five-man central command, had returned recently from a visit to Libya. M-19, founded in the 1970s, was Colombia's most active rebel group until it signed a one-year truce with the government last August. The truce frequently has been broken.

Reagan Rejects Tax Break for Couples

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan will not propose restoring to his tax-revision plan the deduction for married couples who both work, administration officials said Thursday. The proposed elimination of the deduction provoked sharp criticism from members of Congress in both parties when it was announced by the president in May. Administration officials said at the time that they would consider reversing their decision.

Now, they say, revisions of the tax package to be sent to Congress next week will not include restoration of the deduction. It is the responsibility of Congress to decide whether to reinstate the provision, officials said. The deduction now allows working couples to subtract from their taxable incomes 10 percent of the income of the spouse who earned less, up to $3,000. It helps save a few dollars in the lower tax brackets and as much as $1,500 in the top bracket.

California 'Night Stalker' Is Linked to 14 Murders

3 By Katherine Macdonald Washington Post Service

LOS ANGELES - He enters, almost always, through an un-locked window or door just before dawn. It is almost always a yellow or beige house. And then, almost always, he shoots his sleeping victims in the head. The public now calls him the Night Stalker, the latest serial killer to terrorize Los Angeles. He has been linked to 14 murders and 21 rapes, assaults and kidnappings in California.

This serial killer will set a pattern only to break-it. For a time, his habit of entering through unlocked windows and doors inspired the name the Walk-In Killer. But the pattern did not hold. In one of the killings attributed to him, the victim - a 30-year-old - was dragged from her car and shot to death. The Los Angeles Herald-Examiner coined the name "Night Stalker." Some police officers called him the 818 Killer because he at one time had selected all of his victims within telephone area code 818 of the San Gabriel and San Fernando valleys north of Los Angeles.

But last week he apparently traveled to San Francisco and fired bullets into the heads of a sleeping couple to whom the Night Stalker was previously only someone for Los Angeles to worry about Southern California wondered if the killer had migrated north.

Then last Sunday someone entered a house in Orange County south of Los Angeles just before 3 A.M. and shot Bill Carns, 29, in the head. His fiancee was raped.

Police investigators, who are withholding some information about evidence the killer leaves behind as a "signature," had no doubt: the Night Stalker had returned to Southern California. His victims are young and old, men and women and children, Caucasian and Oriental. He does not always shoot them. Some have been beaten to death. Some have been stabbed. Two have had their Not all of his victims have died. Some who were shot in the head survived, including Mr. Carns, but he was in critical condition on

Some of the survivors described their attacker. According to Com-mander William Booth of the Los Angeles Police Department, he is a Caucasian with a tan complexion, brown curly hair and brown eyes. He stands 6 feet (1.83 meters) or a little over, and weighs about 150 pounds (68 kilograms). His teeth are widely spaced and badly stained. A dentist has told law enforcement agencies that he treated a man closely resembling a

Dr. Alfred Coodley, professo emeritus of clinical psychology at the University of Southern California, sees a faint pattern. It's true that in the past serial killers have seemed to select a rather definite kind of person," Dr. Coodley said. "They looked for an elderly person, or a child, or some one with a particular kind of hair do. This one, on the surface, does not seem to have done this. He has selected a whole family."

The "compulsive driven" kill ings. Dr. Coodley said, bring to the Night Stalker a sick gratification, which rapidly disappears and nceds to be repeated.

Dr. Coodley surmises that the killer is gripped in a sadistic rage triggered by some recent event in

Oil, Coups and Nigeria

As a major oil exporter, Nigeria lived pros-perously on a rapidly rising flow of foreign earnings through the 1970s. Although there were some troubling side effects of that pros-perity, they seemed manageable at the time. The country's strong currency raised Nigerians' purchasing power and undercut - by a process that Americans have recently come to understand — Nigeria's industry and agricul-ture. Local production had trouble competing with imports despite many protectionist measures taken by the government

The oil revenues peaked in 1980, then started to fall. Anxious to maintain its recent standard of living, Nigeria began to borrow abroad. Under Shehu Shagari, the elected civilian president who had replaced the previous military rulers, the government acquired sub-stantial debts. But President Shagari was reelected in the summer of 1983 for another four years. He turned to the International Monetary Fund for advice; the IMF suggested, among other things, dropping the exchange rate of the now overvalued currency. Mr. Shagari announced an austerity program but, at the end of 1983, was deposed by a military coup that pledged itself to end "the crisis of confidence now afflicting our nation."

That, unfortunately, is not what happened. Major General Mohammed Buhari, who led the new government, made a mistake that many other governments have made over the years: he confused the defense of an overvalued currency with patriotism, the flag and national pride. Unemployment spread in the cities, and, because agricultural capacity had shrunk, food shortages began to occur. Imports were no longer an easy alternative, for foreign loans became hard to find and more costly. Oil revenues continued to drop and currently are probably little more than half the level they reached five years ago. The general told the country to expect even more drastic austerity in the coming three years. That led to the count his week by other inilitary officers under Major General Ibrahim Babangida. Are General Babangida's chances any better than his predecessor's? Very possibly. If his government is prepared to compromise with the IMF and the other lenders, they are prepared to compromise with him.

But no country has been more severely whipsawed by fluctuating oil prices than Nigeria. In a country with a large and poor population, it is difficult to keep rising oil revenues funneled into long-term development and in-vestment. And when revenues fall, it is even harder to prevent a sharp drop in the standard of living. What Nigeria needs is a better kind of economic shock absorber than it, or any of the low-income countries, has so far devised.

Who Sank the Warrior?

President François Mitterrand of France has a diplomatic, political and moral problem that will not go away. Almost from the moment that the environmental ship Rainbow Warrior was bombed and sunk in New Zealand, people in and out of France suspected official French involvement. Now the official report by Bernard Tricot, a respected opposition figure, has, if anything, made the suspi-cions worse. They will endure until the French government explains the inconsistencies.

The Rainbow Warrior, a ship belonging to the environmental-action group Greenpeace, sailed to Auckland, New Zealand, prior to protesting French nuclear tests in the South Pacific. On July 10, bombs attached to its hull exploded, sinking the ship and killing a crew member. A few days later, New Zealand police arrested two suspects who turned out to be French intelligence agents.

The Tricot report confirms that these two, and also four other suspects, were agents carrying out an officially sanctioned intelligence nission against Greenpeace. Three of the fugitives, all frogmen, or underwater specialists, were secretly smuggled back to France. Still, the French report concludes, there is not sufficient evidence to prove that the fatal bombing was officially sanctioned, or that the agents themselves went beyond intelligence gathering. Perhaps, but then why send frogmen? And if there is no convincing evidence to link these operatives to the fatal explosions, why was it necessary to spirit them out of the reach of the authorities in New Zealand?

The French Left, facing an unpromising parliamentary election campaign, speculates that rightists in the intelligence service set out to embarrass the government. From the Right come charges of Socialist mismanagement and hypocrisy. Meanwhile, it would not be surprising if New Zealand's government, already at odds with traditional allies over its anti-nuclear stands, were quick to see in this episode a link between nuclear weapons testing and a disregard for international morality.

Without facts, and with the French nuclear tests coming next month, speculation will spiral, which is reason enough to hope that France will now produce findings that invite more respect and less ridicule.

Protectionists in the Wings

When Congress reconvenes next week, it intends to take up foreign trade and protection from imports. Citing a trade deficit that will probably be well over $140 billion this year, the Senate majority leader, Robert J. Dole, says that he expects votes on protectionist legislation by mid-October. But that tremendous trade deficit is not the cause of the trouble in the U.S. economy. It is a result.

Protection and the drive to keep out imports will not help prevent further losses of jobs in American manufacturing. The U.S. trade deficit is mainly caused by the dollar's high exchange rate. Dollars spent on foreign goods bush the dollar downward. Cutting off imports by legislation will push the dollar higher, and that will make American exports less competitive than ever in foreign markets.

Congress keeps avoiding that reality. America is still by far the world's largest exporter. It will sell more than $200 billion worth of goods abroad this year. That represents a lot of jobs, and protectionist legislation is a threat to them. Tariffs and import quotas do not prevent unemployment; they only redistribute it.

Any real solution will have to deal with the dollar's exchange rate. It has dropped since the peak late last winter, but the drop so far will not have much effect on the trade balance. Trade flows generally reflect the exchange rates of a year or more earlier. Even after six months' decline, the dollar now stands almost exactly at its average 1984 value.

To get it down safely will require two things: a far lower federal budget deficit in the United States, and faster growth of internal demand in the major economies elsewhere, meaning primarily Japan and West Germany. The U.S. trade deficit is a U.S. responsibility. It is generated not by obscure financial technicalities but by an American inclination in the 1980s to consume much more than America produces. Japan and especially West Germany currently depend for their prosperity --- more

West Germany's Spy Record

In all the long history of spies, no country has managed to make itself leakproof. Right now the United States is prosecuting a special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation on charges of passing secret documents to a female agent of the Soviet KGB. A Navy spy ring that operated for years has recently been broken up. Britain has never lived down the case of Kim Philby. But nobody in recent years has topped the West Germany's record as an open book in which spies browse undetected. In 1954 Otto John, the head of Bonn's counterintelligence operation, turned out to have been a Soviet agent all along. Twenty years later Chancellor Willy Brandt resigned because Günter Guillaume, a close aide, was exposed as a Communist agent. Now a key official in the counterintelligence service has defected to East Germany, and secretaries to the president and the economics minister have recently fled to avoid arrest.

The West Germans do face some uniquely difficult problems. People in East and West Germany speak the same language, frequently have relatives in the other zone and tend to consider themselves as two halves of one nation. The flow of immigrants from East to West Germany is enormous, and it is inevitable that sleeper agents are among them.

1910: Officials Seize Smnggled Pearls NEW YORK — After the indignation excited by the midnight blanket and mattress-shaking expedition in the Mauretania, the New York Customs officials have confounded all their critics by seizing a 1,200 guinea pearl necklace, cunningly concealed in the hat of the wife of a well-known millionaire, who arrived here on the Baltic. The scene at the docks when the matronly smuggler was unmasked was most dramatic. A female searcher placed her foot in Mrs. J. Reynolds Adriance's cabin door to see Mrs. Adriance remove her hat, a straw turban with peacock-blue velvet and adorned with two blue wings. Tearing the velvet at the back, she opened a deep fold in the brim and a shower of pearls fell to the floor.

1935: Hearst Calls for Party Break NEW YORK -- Coincident with the movement of conservative Democrats to map their course in next year's elections, William Randolph Hearst, in a letter which was given frontpage prominence, not only in all the Hearst papers throughout the country but in the press generally, declared that President Roosevelt was no longer entitled to regular party support and that conservatives in the party should draft Alfred E. Smith to lead them in 1936. Hearst suggests the formation of a Jeffersonian Democratic party, with traditionally conservative policies, as contrasted with what he calls "the Socialist Democratic party," into which he insists the New Deal has transformed

Reagan Is Sending Gorbachev Contradictory Signals

W ASHINGTON — "There is nothing like the deadline of a summit to knock heads together and shape up a bureaucracy." Richard Nixon wrote recently in Foreign Affairs. But he is a back number speaking for yesterday's men.

The Reagan approach to the November summit with Mikhail Gorbachev finds expression in a cacoph-ony of odd noises coming out of the Washington and Santa Barbara babels. For the interplay of personality among the president and his top security advisers works against knocking heads together.

The opening note of discord was an announcement from Santa Bar-bara that the United States would undertake testing of an anti-satellite (or ASAT) weapon in the near future. The Pentagon's warriors wanted that to prove to Moscow they are under no pressure from Congress to abate the arms buildup.

In fact, the United States appears to be way ahead of Russia in development of a capacity to shoot down satellites in space. But the ability to kill satellites impairs their use in reconnaissance for arms control purposes, and even for such defenpurposes, and even for such deten-sive programs as "star wars." So America could easily have post-poned further testing until the Ge-neva meeting in November. Instead, by announcing the tests, Moscow was handed, and immediately turned to account, a propaganda claim against U.S. bellicosity. The "spy dust" story announced next day deepened the dissonance. To track Americans in Russia and elsewhere the Soviet secret police has been using a chemical substance which might cause cancer. Assuming new evidence of the carcinogenic effect, the right way to break the news is to tell the Russians quietly first so they can make adjustments.

Instead the State Department, at the behest of security officials, broke the news without having enough detail to answer American questions.

One intriguing question is why the announcement had to be made in late August, 1985. Probably the chief concern was to air the danger as soon as it became known to avoid any dereliction of duty to exposed Americans. But a widespread allied suspicion is that American intelligence services wanted a Russian horror story to counter the growing lack of confidence spreading from spy scandals in West Germany and France. No high American official was particularly concerned about the Soviet reaction which was predictably - a denial

Mr. Reagan positively declared his lack of concern in a radio interview with Washington Broadcast News. He said that in his view the purpose of the Geneva summit was to "eliminate ... hostilities ... and suspicions." He said he did not want just a session on particular, specific issues." But that is exactly what the Russians do want, as they have made clear with abundant hints and

Apart from asserting his naresponsiveness to the main Soviet concern, Mr. Reagan indulged anew in nudges about limiting "star wars" and cutting back on offensive arms.

ideological sloganeering. The Russians, he said, "believe in the one-world Communist state, the world of revolution." But if Mr. Gorbachev is fixed in that conviction, there is little point in trying to reach an accord with him. And still less in disciplining American military and intelligence services. Robert McFarlane, the president's national security adviser, knows much better than that. In a Santa Barbara speech, wrongly billed as "hard-line," Mr. McFarlane held out the possibility of "in-cremental improvements" in Big Two relations. He named several conditions, including changed Soviet approaches to human rights which is not likely. But he cited two others: regional issues and Russia's unconstrained defense buildup.

By Joseph Kraft

There, if Mr. Reagan knocked some heads together, accommodation might indeed be possible.

But while Mr. McFarlane is making an opening for progress at the summit, his status in the Reagan administration is unclear. The inside gossip is that the national security adviser has not been happy in his job and wants out. The gossip weakens Mr. McFarlane's hand. Secretary of State George Shultz also knows that heads have to be knocked together. But his style is to emerge as the man of consensus whom everybody trusts. In the past, he used Mr. McFarlane to run the ball against his bureaucratic rivals. Recently he has been lying back to the point of fading from view. He has had nothing to say about Big Two relations, South Africa, Central America and the Middle East — the very essence of foreign policy.

To be sure, Mr. Shultz will be meeting the new Soviet foreign minister. Eduard Shevardnadze, at the lister. United Nations next month. But Mr. Shultz's bargaining instinct is to avoid seeming eager. With Mr. Gor-bachev pressing for accords, Mr. Shultz naturally hangs back. Inside the bureaucracy, moreover, he likes to win victories quietly, with everything set up in advance so that opponents have to throw themselves in front of an ongoing train to head him off. But there is no ongoing train now. There is a new Soviet leader with abundant public relations skills. And Washington seems. baffled as to how to handle him.

So Mr. Reagan slouches toward Mr. Gorbachev ahead of the sumflashing contradictory signals. Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

We Are Ignoring the Plutonium Issue at Our Peril

GENEVA — Delegates of the 130 member nations of the treaty on the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons began meeting here on Tuesday for a monthlong review of the accord. But the matter that should be most on their minds is the one that will receive least attention. Plutonium: the original "manmade" element: the stuff of the first atomic test and of the bomb that destroyed Nagasaki; a waste product of civilian nuclear reactors and now the preferred fuel of the future of the nuclear power industry. Each year 100,000 pounds (45,000 kilograms) of plutonium are being discharged as waste in the spent fuel of nuclear power plants throughout the world. Industry wants to recover the plutonium and use it to supplement fresh reactor fuel. In this way, supplies of nonexplosive uranium fuel can be conserved and the world's uranium resource extended.

The problem is that plutonium, separated from spent fuel, becomes an explosive. Less than 15 pounds is needed for an atomic bomb.

The amounts of explosive plutonium to be brought into existence for use in civil programs are staggering. Within the next decade, explosive plutonium for civilian applications will eclipse the 200 tons that the superpowers now use in weapons. By the year 2000, some 3 million pounds of plutonium will have been produced in spent fuel — the equivalent of about 200,000 nuclear weapons, compared with the 50,000 now deployed by the superpowers - of vhich nearly a million pounds may be separated into explosive form.

Why all this plutonium? Is it needed? Can it be monitored and controlled down to the relatively few pounds that, if diverted by nations or stolen by terrorists, could be turned into bombs? Similar questions need to be asked regarding the other nuclear explosive material, highly enriched uranium, the stuff of the Hiroshima bomb, which is produced in smaller but significant quantities to fuel many research reactors worldwide.

These questions go to the heart of mankind's need to control the atom or to be controlled and destroyed by it. They should be high on the agenda of the current NPT review conference. Yet, by all indications, they will receive scant attention at a conference preoccupied with protests about unfulfilled treaty commitments by the superpowers to curb their arms race and by nuclear suppliers to provide all the nuclear assistance demanded by treaty states.

There are a number of factors behind this bizarre neglect of the proliferation dangers of explosive plutoni-um and uranium. The treaty itself is blind to the weapons potential of these materials so long as they are dedicated to peaceful purposes and subject to a system of audits and inspections known as "safeguards" administered by the International Atomic Energy Agency.
The treaty is crafted to prohibit the manufacture of nuclear devices, not the materials needed to make them explode. By making explosions and the acquisition of explosive devices the basic measure of proliferation, the treaty permits nations to acquire the technology and materials re-quired for bomb-making, short of acmal fabrication of devices.

The treaty provides a cloak of le-gitimacy for "latent" proliferation in the form of stockpiles and know-how that can be rapidly transformed into nuclear arsenals at a time of regional or global crisis. The treaty also con-tributes to the danger of theft of nuBy Paul L. Leventhal clear explosive materials by terrorists - a danger that increases in proportion to the amounts of materials produced, traded and used.

The impending widespread commercial use of nuclear explosive ma-terials confronts the world with the most momentous decision on the application of atomic energy since the decision to drop, rather than demonstrate the bomb over Japan. It is not too late to avoid the plutonium path.

Most commercial reprocessing of spent fuel has taken place in France and Britain. Although some 60 tons of civilian plutonium have been separated worldwide, (including Belgium, West Germany, India, Japan and the United States) more than 90 percent remains in France and Britain. Fourfifths of spent fuel from modern plants remains unreprocessed.

The economics of processing and using plutonium is unfavorable in the extreme. Original assumptions that plutonium would be needed to augment scarce supplies of uranium have empowered, to assume a task it can tion Science Monitor.

proved false. The world resource of uranium is projected to be as high as 20 million tons — enough to provide a lifetime supply of fuel for at least 4,000 nuclear power plants compared with about 300 now operating. For plutonium to become economical, uranium would have to increase in price to $150 a pound, compared with its present price of about $20.

Of greater concern, the IAEA — long defended by nuclear advocates as having an effective safeguards system — is now widely acknowledged to lack both the technical and the political means to detect and give timely warning of diversions of nationally held explosive nuclear materials. The IAEA was never given the police authority to prevent such diversions, even though the treaty calls for application of IAEA safeguards "with a view to preventing diversion of nuclear energy for peaceful uses."

On the other hand, the IAEA is handle: taking international custody of "excess" nuclear explosive materials. This includes photonium in separated form or contained in spent fuel. and uranium were seen for what they are: unnecessary and too dangerous for world commerce. Nuclear power and research reactors can be run efficiently and effectively without them.

Continued failure by the public to demand that policymakers constrain those who would make civilian fuels out of atom-bomb materials will lead inevitably to a world in which nuclear explosives and nuclear violence are commonplace. Such a world would be horrible. The NPT conference is the logical place to start the move away from nuclear proliferation.

Nonproliferation Pact Sets Moral Norm

LONDON — Pushing a senior Pa-kistani cabinet minister to the wall during an argument about Pakistan's nuclear weapon program, he shot back: "You have it. You say it keeps the peace. Why can't we?" Even during a relaxed dinner in Islamabad, it was a difficult question to answer, especially when some national leaders display resentment and annoyance at being preached at by the white race, whose own track record on armaments and wars is poor. It is this kind of raw emotion that Western and Soviet bloc delegates will encounter at the monthlong review in Geneva of the Nonproliferation Treaty drafted in 1968.

The NPT is one of the most remarkable international treaties. Some 130 countries have ratified it, voluntarily relinquishing their sovereign right to build nuclear weapons. And the few who have not, like Pakistan and India, feel immense pressure to be beholden to it. One gauge of the NPT's effect is that in 1963 President John Kennedy envisaged a world in the 1970s with 15 to 25 nuclear weapon states. Apart from America, the Soviet Union, Britain and France only China presently has a major nuclear weapons program. Israel probably possesses a handful. Pakistan, India and South Africa may be within months of being able to assemble a bomb. Other "danger zone" countries, like Brazil, Argentina and Taiwan are perhaps years away. Significantly, however, not since 1974 when India conducted a test of a "civilian" nuclear explosion has there been a confirmed report of a nuclear test, other than by the Big Five. India and Pakistan, in particular, play a kind of sublimated nuclear diplomacy with each other. The other day Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi was accusing Pakistan of being near to having a nuclear weapon.

But this kind of talk by India has gone on for years. It is four years now since I was told in New Delhi by high-level government officials and by the U.S. Ambassador to India that Pakistan was less than a year away from having a bomb. While it is likely that Pakistan has now reached the position where it has only to put in the last few screws to have one, the fact is Pakistan chooses not to. And

By Jonathan Power

India, having shown it can explode a "device", has chosen to go no further. There are, it appears, great moral and political constraints. The NPT, even if not signed, is a norm. It is surprising, then, that many people continue to argue that it would not be too serious a matter if a number of Third World countries went nuclear. Professor Kenneth Waltz, a former CIA expert on nuclear matters, in a paper published by the International Institute for Strategic Studies, argues that nuclear weapons could provide a stabilizing bal-ance in a Third World conflict, just as they do in the East-West context. Indeed, since they are relatively cheap, he believes they could save developing countries a lot of money,

PARIS - About 200 members of the Commumist-led General Labor Confederation rolled 75 new Renault cars into the middle of the Champs-Elysees early Thursday, blocking the avenue for three hours to protest the assembly of French autos in foreign countries.

They left after police intervened. The cars. which had been commandeered from a suburban Renault factory by the union activists, were towed away.

The union has accused the automaker of sacrificing French jobs by assembling its cars at Renault subsidiaries in Belgium and Spain. Renault lost 12.55 billion francs ($1.56 billion) last year and plans to cut 17,000 jobs by the end of 1986. Renault, France's state-owned automaker, announced it had filed criminal charges in connection with the theft of the automobiles.

A French television cameraman was injured when he was caught between police and demonstrators, but there were no other reports of violence or of any arrests.

Late Wednesday, about 300 union members in Bordeaux boarded a freight train carrying Renault auto parts destined for an assembly plant in Spain and dumped hundreds of parts on the track, preventing the train from leaving for several hours.

MOSCOW — The head of a team of U.S. scientists testing a chemical purportedly used to track U.S. diplomats in the Soviet Union said Thursday the chemical probably loses its cellmutating properties after it is absorbed into the body. Dr. Ernest McConnell said at

Church Reports Attacks on Activist Youths in Chile

In their own material ease, and in that of the milieu they so often convey, the postwar artists stand in contrast to their peers in more turbulent countries and to their forebears in America, the creators shaped, in-deed defined, by the national cataciysms of two World Wars and the Great Depression. that is not to say the equation is simply experience equals art; but it does mean that in the absence of great, galvanic events, these artists must find other means and other subjects to stir their passions.

Some, like the playwrights David Mamet and Sam Shepard, have immersed themselves in the underclass in the manner of Ernest Hemingway or Engene O'Neill. The film directors Stephen Spielberg and Lawrence Kasdan have left the fantasy vehicles that typified their careers for more probing, naturalistic work. The playwright Christo-pher Durang and the filmmaker Susan Scidelman have posed their questions about the status-conscious way of life through satire. Dramatists like David Rabe and novelists such as Bret Easton Ellis and McInemey have reacted with direct revulsion to the narcissism of the age, forging what might be called a literature of outrage. But the unifying factor for almost all these artists is the seuse, perhaps expressed best by Durang, at the suburban generation has a tale to tell that is not dependent on having endured gunfire or breadlines.

"There's a line from 'Endgame' — 'You're on earth, there's no cure for that,' " said Durang, the author of the bitterly comic plays "The Marriage of Bette and Boo" and "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for "You" "It could be a smarth to come on the companies of Bette and Boo" and "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All for "You" "It could be a smarth to companie of Bette and Lee Strasberg." You." "It applies as much to someone on a much time to worry" about one's own psyche. The social historian Christopher Lasch put it similarly in his book "The Culture of Narcissism": "Economic man has given way to the psychological man of our times — the final product of bourgeois individualism. The new narcissist is haunted not by guilt but by anxiety."

It is true over the span of history that the well-fixed and well-born have produced inspired and innovative art; indeed artists for centuries imagined and executed at the sufferance of the church or the crown. Even amid outward security there can be the inner struggle central to art. Beyond that is a hard reality: Today's American artists, without vast patronage, must survive in the market-place as well as the salou.

But the contemporary view, as expounded by Llosa among countless other artists and critics, is that great upheaval, great issues and great conflict give birth to great art. Who can deny the power in the films of the Pole Andrzej Wajda, the plays of the South African Athol Fugard, the paintings of the the German Anselm Kiefer, the novels of the Mexican Carlos Fuentes and the Czech Milan Kundera — power that seems absent so often in their American counterparts.

The contrast is equally extreme between America past and America present. The parents and grandparents of current American artists, in both literal and metaphoric senses, fused modernist style with social and political engagement. Hemingway, the scion of suburban bluebloods, went to war and came out calling it "something quite irreplacable" for a writer. William Faulkner and Tennessee Williams married their personal visions to a social landscape: the demise of the planter aristocracy in the South. During the Depression, the Works Progress Administration's programs thrust into a sea of poverty artists including the writers Nelson Algren, James Agee and Studs Terkel, the photographers Walker Evans and Margaret Bourkeford, Harold Chirman and Lee Strasberg.

"Never were writers so militant in their

"Never were writers so militant in their suburban street as someone on a freighter. I don't think my writing is a response to the suburban experience; it's a response to life."

But as Durang continues talking he raises the other side of the argument. "It is true," he said, "that if one was worried about getting food on the table we wouldn't have as truch time to appropriate the said about orders."

"Never were writers so militant in their challenge or so conscious of what was want-days on anxious to participate in society and to liberate it," the critic Alfred Kazin wrote of the '30s in "On Native Grounds." As Kazin himself points out, however, the quality of the art depended on a writer's ability to internalize and personalize larger events.

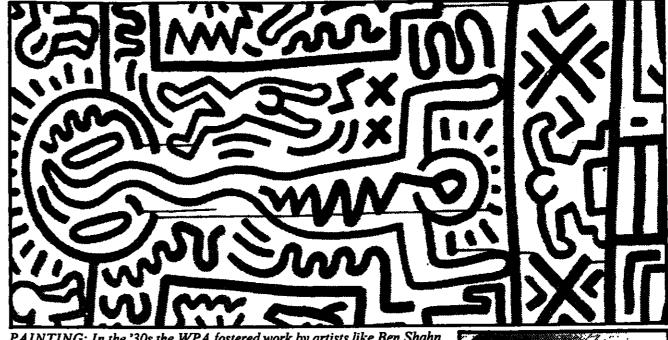

THE self-satisfaction and self-absorption of Americans, artists very much included, is as old as Thoreau. Nor is the self-obsessed artist solely an American phenomenon, as anyone who has read D. H. Lawrence or seen an Ingmar Bergman film can attest.

Still, it is clear that in the boom decades after World War II, American artists began looking in much more than out. Many of them grew up with parents who had scraped to rise from Depression deprivation into the middle class and who made freedom from need the rule of domestic life. At the same time, modern America grew so large and complex as to dash the '30s ideal that one good person could change the system; Mr. Smith would not go to Washington in the '80s, except perhaps as a lobbyist.

The Vietnam War only briefly provoked the deep self-examination that the world wars did for writers like Hemingway, Faulkner, Norman Mailer and Joseph Heller. For one thing, college deferments from the draft spared thousands of future artists any first-hand exposure to the war or the issues it raised; most of the directors who conveyed Vietnam on screen - Francis Ford Coppola, Michael Cimino, John Milius — spent the war attending film school. Certainly exceptions existed in the writers David Rabe ("Pavlo Hummel," "Sticks and Bones" and "Streamers"), Michael Herr ("Dispatches") and Timothy O'Brien ("Waiting for Cacciato"). But now, only a decade after the war, the best between these churted exide their hard questions have been shunted aside as the nation at best craves a conciliatory communion on the plight of the Vietnam veteran and at worst embraces the cartoonstyle revisionism of "Rambo."

Artists without any ghosts and with a short memory of even their own times can easily enough produce a static culture — a cultural terrain that often appears barren. If

PAINTING: In the '30s the WPA fostered work by artists like Ben Shahn (right); today the graffiti artist Keith Haring is a wise investment.

Odets's cabbie named Lefty, then his equivalent today is Ann Beattie's publisher named Hildon. Other novelists simply write novels about being novelists.

Many of the major films, both critically and commercially, were fantasy adventures like "E. T." and "Star Wars." Popular film fare, meanwhile, can seem like a procession of so many "Ghostbusters," "Goonies" and "Gremlins." The contemporary films on larger social and political topics are dispro-portionately the work of writers and directors with roots in the Depression - Martin Ritt, Sidney Lumet, Haskell Wexler, Horton Foote. These men, in their 50s and 60s, serve as the heirs to John Ford, King Vidor, Preston Sturges and Frank Capra.

If there is an overriding issue for visual artists, it is the media. Important artists such as Robert Longo and Cindy Sherman have created their most urgent work in examining how the popular media, particularly televi-sion and film, shape people's responses both to society and to themselves. The work of an artist like David Salle expresses the difficulty of sorting through the innumerable, oftencontrary images of an electronic culture.

The art world, especially in New York, functions like an interchange of celebrity and commerce, transforming the Julian Schnabels and Keith Harings from scuffling eccentrics to wise investments in months. There's such a thing as a modernist ego ideal for the artist: you do one outrageous thing and suddenly you're important," said Perry Meisel, an associate professor of English at New York University and the author of a upcoming book on modernism

The same is often true of popular music. Given exceptions like Bruce Springsteen (most clearly on "Nebraska," an album deeply influenced by the work of Woody Guthrie), Randy Newman ("Good Old Boys") and Stephen Sondheim ("Follies" and "Pacific Overtures" particularly), the most talented songwriters have directed their scrutiny inward, producing memorable work only as long as their romances or general angst could yield sufficient grist.

One counter-argument to the state of so much American art is that it reflects only too acutely the life around it. "In the '60s," said Howard Stein, the chairman of the graduate theater program at Columbia University and a professor of playwrighting, "the plays reflected the country's examination of itself, a coming to terms with our own ugliness. I would use Arthur Miller's 'All My Sons' as a model for those kinds of plays. But as soon the stock character of social realism was as the '60s were over, the social issues went down the drain, or were done in TV dramas. I don't know what the artistic subject be-came, except the scream for help, which is a private story."

Works like Arthur Kopit's "End of the World" and Larry Kramer's "The Normal Heart" do carry on the tradition of the play of ideas, but their respective ruminations of nuclear war and AIDS stand like lonely sentries. Is that solely the artists's fault? The fact is that, without a king's coffers behind them or even the governmental largesse of most modern European nations, American artists often must balance the creation of serious work with the need to make a living. Probing art, difficult art, rarely pays the rent.

F anything, the idea of political commit-ment ments mostly parody and skepti-cism in the 1980s. Early in the film "Risky Business," for instance, several students from an affluent suburban high school are comparing the annual incomes of different professions. "Doesn't anyone want to accomplish anything? Or do we just want to make money?" one student abruptly puts in. "Make money," another responds. "Lots of money.

"The Big Chill" generated a great deal of controversy, particularly on the political left, for suggesting that social ties rather than shared political values bound a group of friends who attended the University of Michigan during the '60s. The anti-war rallies in which they participated, one felt, could just as well have been fraternity pares. But Lawrence Kasdan. that rather than endorsing his generation's retreat from the barricades he was ironically observing it. "People thought I was saying the characters' beliefs were insincere," he said. "It's just that their concerns changed over time and their political concerns didn't stand the test of time. I never meant that they were all phony, but you have to look at where those people are now."

At the same time, there exists among young people a sincere, if inchoate, desire to connect — to some cause or at least to a life with some grit to it. The massive response to the Live Aid concert attests to the longing, as does the activism on college campuses on the South African divestment issue. It also helps explain the massive appeal of Bruce Springsteen, who can sing to a crowd of kids in Lacoste shirts about a jobless auto worker. That wistful, naive yearning for working class roots is familiar to many artists who grew up in the middle class. "I had this feeling for a long time that it was a handicap." said McInerney, the author of "Bright Lights, Big City," the screenplay for its film version and a new novel about American expatriates in Japan, "Ransom." "I felt that I had to be a bartender or something, that the grittier strata of American life was the itory of truth and vision. And I did feel obliged, when I graduated college, to go across the country doing odd jobs - a real Kerouac number. I'm not saying I changed my class stripes, but there was an attempt not to be just another clean, well-educated white boy. But ultimately I decided I had to write out of my own experience. I couldn't just cobble up a persona from scratch. I had to trust who I was or the writing wouldn't be authentic."

Susan Seidelman, the director of "Smith-ereens" and "Desperately Seeking Susan," recounts a similar passage. "At one point I did have the idea that art had to have big themes," she said. "I admired those artists who seemed so aware of their times - the Berlin artists before World War II. I've thought at times I should do something about apartheid. But then I realized it was

Another Embattled British Landmark — The Red Phone Box

ONDON — The British telephone sys-tem, which used to be part of the Post Office, has been privatized and is doing very nicely on the stock market (in July alone, shares went up by 22.9 percent). But if the company is in the plack, it is making telephone users see red. The reason is Telecom's awful idea to scrap Britain's traditional bright red metal telephone booths, of which some 60,000 currently exist from lonely country hedgerows to stately pairs outside London's law courts. A few hundred boxes may be left as quaint remembrances of things past.

The Englishman's telephone box is his castle. Like the London taxi, it can be entered by a gentleman in a top hat. It protects the user's privacy, keeps him warm and is, it has been said, large enough for a small cocktail party. The new models proposed by British Telecom are three-sided, transparent and banal; they expose the user's knees to chilblains and his eyes and ears to urban disorder. They could be in Düsseldorf or the Bronx: There is nothing British about them. British Telecom has, expectedly, found itself under attack. Leading the battle is the Thirties Society, a conservation group that looks on the new telephone booth rather as if E.T. were ousting the Lion and the Unicorn.

"Admittedly," says the Thirties Society.
which was founded in 1979 to conserve post-

1914 architecture and design, "the old boxes may not fit the Spage Age vision that the upper echelons of telephone management wish to promote. But they are still useful and practical, and furthermore much loved by young and old. They retain an aura of more spacious days. They have a solidity lacking in today's throw-away society. Their regal every and the crowns they bear add dignity to the concept of public utility."

The Thirties Society has just completed an impassioned report. The British Telephone Box - Take It as Red," which they are sending to newspapers and to anyone willing to send them £3.50 in return (3 Park Square West, London NW1).

Why is the red box so important? Because it is so much a part of British life—just this summer an extremely successful series of tourist postcards came out featuring the boxes flanked by punks and other London fauna - and because it was designed by Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, the architect of Liverpool Cathedral and of Battersea power station.

Scott's design, known as the K2, was the winning entry in a 1924 competition. It is described by the Thirties Society as stately, temple-like and thoroughly architectural, with almost square window panes, fluted corners, and a domed roof inspired by Sir John Soane (1753-1837), a leader of the Classical Revival school noted for his work on the Bank of England. Fewer than 200 are thought to survive.

In 1935, Scott designed the K6, also known as the Jubilee Kiosk, a smaller and slightly streamlined version of the K2, which was made until 1968, when a new, greatly simplified model came in. The Thirties Society is not trying to save the 1968 version although they admit that there may be places where it forms an appropriate coun-erpart to buildings of the same date." Another variant of the K2, of which only 50 were made and of which only four are known to survive, was the K4 of 1930, which incorporated a letter box and stamp machine. It was, says the society's report, a flop:

"It was found that the telephone users were disturbed by the clunks when the stamp machine was being used, and the stamps stuck together in wet weather." According to Clive Aslet, who wrote the Thirties Society report with Alan Powers, the best place to see a fine row of K2s is in Broad Court, near the Royal Opera House in Covent Garden. Aslet attributes Telecom's plan to ban the boxes to a wish to modernize its corporate image. Although Aslet agrees that telephone booth equipment should be improved, he says this can easily be done without modifying the old boxes. Telecom's claim that the old boxes are easily vandalized is, he says, canceled out by their admission that a vandal-proof box does not yet exist.

Newer boxes have been vandalized with spray paint: No one has dared do this to a Scott box. The old models are nearly indestructible, some having been in place for over 50 years, while reportedly the new ones have a lifetime of only 15 years. Since a Scottish foundry still has the K2 and K6 molds, they could, if necessary, be reported to the state of the state o duced in versions that are lighter and cheaper than the present cast iron. Thirties Society scouts report that 10 boxes in a light alloy could be cast for only £1,300 (about $1,820).

T will require a vote of Parliament to put the Scott boxes under the protection of the Department of the Environment. In the meantime, the Thirties Society has been urging local authorities to act and it is especially admiring of the City of Westminster, in central London, which has cleaned up old Scott boxes, replaced or added new ones and informed British Telecom that the Scott boxes are so closely identified with the British national character that it would be unthinkable to lose them.

The Borough of Kensington and Chelsea has done little, although the boxes so nicely match the Chelsea pensioners' uniforms, but a Manchester headline ran "Hands Off Our Red Telephone Box" and a member of the Orkney Islands Council in Scotland stated that the Scott boxes "add character to the small-scale vernacular Scots and Norse architecture.

Melton Borough Council invested the red boxes with an almost mystical air: "The Scott kiosks . . . in most cases are easily recognizable links between uncertainty (and even desperation) and civilization." But the Peak District National Park damned with faint praise or praised with faint damn, it is hard to tell which: "The great virtue of the Scott kiosk," it ambiguously stated, "is that it is invisible by virtue of its familiarity."

It is said that Telecom is already selling uprooted boxes for £200 and not everyone, it must be admitted, responds to the Save the Scotts campaign. Some people even like glass boxes, but then some people would. "I suppose," Clive Aslet says, "that one or two people just do like new things."

Scott's K2 and Battersea power station; right, a new Telecom model.

Reminiscences of Grand Hotels

by John Russell

EW YORK - There are hotels with which I identify to a degree that may well be aberrational. Such is their hold upon me that when I go to stay in one of them I foreswear the habits of a lifetime and give traditional sightseeing a miss. The hotel is the city, at such times, and vice versa.

This is what I do. I check in, I go up to a single room, long known to me, on the topmost floor. It has a view. I open the window draw up a chair, sit down and look out. In other cities I should already be prowling the streets with a 1912 Baedeker in one hand and an 1897 Murray's Guide in the other. But in this case I sit there like a frog in deep mud. Unlike the frog. I am not crouching in readiness for an Olympic-style leap. I am waiting for the hotel to mediate between myself and the city. I call room service for lunch and dinner, and I discuss the state of the local theater and opera house with the concierge. Prompted by ruinous impulse, I make some intercontinental calls. But funda-mentally the hotel, the city and I are in conference from morning till night. And the hotel gives out, uninterruptedly.

When I was younger, and a charge on other people, they resented all this very much. "We did not bring you halfway across Europe to skulk in your room," they would say. But I did not agree. In Venice, I had only to draw them to the window to make my point. In Athens, there was the Acropolis just across the way, and in Istanbul the Pera bridge and the Golden Horn.

In Basel, the weight of traffic on the broad Rhine, as seen from the top of the Three Kings Hotel, was worth a whole semester of geography lessons. In Vienna, from the Sacher, there was a great museum, the Albertina, to the right, and the back of a great opera house, with scenery being trucked in and out every morning, to the left. These were historic spectacles, and brooked no arguing. But then it was almost always so.

No matter where I was, I got the view by heart. I also noted every last nuance of my room - among them the design of the newspaper that came with breakfast - and without even opening the door I monitored the alien voices in the corridor, the alien workings of the elevator, the alien tinkle of the orchestra that played for dancing and the footfall of the black-stockinged housemaids as they went about their business.

In time, I could tell one country from another by sound alone. Church bells, street cars, taxi meters, street musicians, the beat of an express train coming into the main of an express train coming into the main station and the cries of newsboy, lottery ticket seller and flower girl — all bore a specific brand. And they came filtered, by courtesy of the hotel. Without the planned neutrality of the hotel, no such concentrated stillness would have been possible. In leading this possibly rather peculiar life, I was fulfilling the wishes of the inven-tors of the grand hotel. It was not their intention to cater only to the tourist, or to the person who wants to be taken care of. They wanted their clients to become part of the hotel, and to think of it as a place that fulfilled their every need, thereby making it unnecessary, if not actually futile, to confront the world outside.

Rooms were huge, so that in pre-adoles-cence we could have ceilings to bounce oranges off, closets big enough for a growing elephant, and windows that started at the floor and rose to a height of 14 feet. Service was highly characterized, with unmistakable ethnic overtones. And the city was omnipresent, though nowhere obtrusive. We did not so much see it as live it.

Sometimes the hotel brought the outside inside. The palm court spoke for the botanical garden. The thunderous colonnades spoke for parliament houses and law courts. The double staircase spoke for an aristocracy that had big ideas and lived up to them. The little shops spoke for the big shops outside. It was as if the city had been turned inside out, like a summer jacket, and shrunk in the wash. If I do not include resort hotels - not even the best and most seductive among them - it is because one of the things that I prize in a hotel is the awareness of other people getting up and going out to work. It picture them cutting and slathering their way through a business breakfast, treading the lobby like racehorses waiting for the start. standing in line for taxis and waiting a little to one side for the limo that they feign to take for granted.

HILE dreaming of that purposeful hubbub, I go over my room piece by evocative piece, dating almost to the year the heavy glass inkwell that has long ceased to know ink, remembering the prehis-toric telephone on its gibber, unhooking the 19th-century battle piece from the wall and checking it for title, date and exhibition label. If the writing paper is still headed with a steel-engraved view of the hotel, complete with phaeton and berline at the door, I clap my hands. For I like above all things a centenarian design, a design so innately right that nothing would be gained by changing it.

My favorite linen has been in the Hotel National in Moscow since before 1917, and my favorite lamps have been shedding the same pale gold light in the Hotel Lutetia in Paris, the Hotel Doelen in Amsterdam and the Hotel d'Angleterre in Copenhagen since before World War I. I like bells that you pull. and pens that you can freshen up with what else? — a penknife.

All this being so, I should have been crazy about a new volume, "Grand Hotel" (Vendome Press, $45). But I would rather read the novel of that name by Vicki Baum any day. "Grand Hotel" -- the new one, that is - has some banal and repetitive essays by the authors (David Watkin excepted) who should have known better. The 416 illustrations not all of them fascinating - are captioned in a way that makes it almost the work of a lifetime to tell one from another. So I think

important to say something about my own

The Hotel d'Angleterre in Copenhagen.

David Mamet personifies the writer who can literally penetrate the working-class and even criminal worlds. Mamet, who grew up in both a middle-class Chicago neighbor-hood and a suburb he calls "New South Hell," shipped on a Great Lakes ore boat, did clerical work in a seamy real-estate office, played cards with ex-convicts and taught writing in a prison.

"I don't think any writer worth anything goes out trying to gather material," Mamet aid. "The mark of a great writer is that his writing and his life are one." As for his succession of odd jobs, Mamet said, "I did it to pay the rent, so what I gained from it was being able to pay the rent." By which he means something more: "People who grew up as I did and became accountants or lawyers or doctors never experienced that. They're the people for whom society paid the rent. Which is why I didn't write about them for a long time. There's a basic feeling of selfworth that's lacking. It's not because you live on a tree-lined street; it's because you have an institutionalized profession."

In the case of directors like Stephen Spielberg and Lawrence Kasdan, artistic growth can be measured simply in the movement from fantastic or extra-terrestrial characters to humans. Spielberg is currently directing the screen version of Alice Walker's "The Color Purple" — a Pultizer Prize-winning novel about two black sisters that is both earthly and earthy.

Kasdan built his Hollywood reputation writing films that largely evoked the adventure movies he had seen during childhood. But more recently, with "Body Heat" and "The Big Chill," Kasdan has shown an inquiring mind to match his technical wizard-ry. "Both films," he said, "dealt thematically with the same thing — the distance between a person's values and their behavior. It's just that one was a melodrama and the other was more naturalistic and satiric. It's a struggle to live honorably, and that struggle fascinates me." It is also a struggle, Kasdan adds, that has little to do with one's financial status. "I don't think hardship of experience makes a better artist," he said. "You're limited by your abilities and they're not going to be expanded because you went through trau-

Durang and Seidelman illustrate an alternative, a way of using satire both to entertain and to critically comment. Their specific methods, however, differ widely. Seidelman takes a gentler tone, accenting the ridiculous in deadpan style. "Desperately Seeking Susan," for instance, trades heavily on advertis-ing and artifice. Her characters seek romance in the personals ads and fame in television commercials; even the hero of sorts, Des, lives in a realm of illusion. He works as a film projectionist and the moviewithin-a-movie that he shows, Seidelman points out, "isn't 'Wild Strawberries' but a B-movie called 'Time Travelers.'"

Durang favors black comedy drenched in Catholic guilt and rage. "The Marriage of Bette and Boo" has alcoholism, cancer and a series of stillborn babies; in "Sister Mary Ignatius" the former students of a nun confront and then kill her; the title character in "Baby With the Bathwater" barely moves --except to try to commit suicide by running in front of a bus.

PART of the problem for irony, satire or world-weary detachment — all familiar viewpoints in the art of the '80s -has always been in being taken as seriousy as fury. And fury is the currency of the literature of outrage, a body of work that responds to the ever more conspicuous consumption. "When you're writing about decadence and the apathy that leads to it, you're looking at a complete lack of spirituality," said Bret Easton Ellis, the 21-year-old author of "Less Than Zero," a novel about the sybaritic children of California. "That's America in the '80s and especially the new generation. There's never been more stress to gain style and stature and wealth. There's never been more emphasis on fashion and style for its own sake."

totype for such literature — one of its first works and one of its most enraged. His principal character is Eddie, a movie casting director who was passionately political in the past but who, faced with the failure of both ideals and marriage, is determined to anesthetize himself with drink, drugs and sex. What torments Eddie most, it is clear, is not being able to reconcile himself to hedonism.

With strikingly different approaches, McInemey and Ellis have grappled with the same question. McInemey's "Bright Lights, Big City" is on the surface a picaresque jaunt along the cocaine trail of New York night-life. The heart of the novel, however, is a cry against the excess and a realization by the central character that he must "learn everything all over again." Filis's "Less Than Zero" follows a college student as he returns on Christmas break to his Los Angeles home. With a frighteningly subdued style. Ellis catalogues alcoholism, cocaine and heroin use, omnivorous sexuality, pornography and homosexual prostitution. When the narrator, Clay, decides to return to college, it comes as nothing less than a decision to live rather than die.

What is perhaps as striking as the litera-ture of outrage itself is the difficulty audiences have facing it. New Yorkers tended to distance themselves from "Hurlyburly" by viewing it as a play about California rather than about narcissism. Both McInerney and Ellis have been struck by how many readers, and friends, take their novels as baedeckers

"The irony in the book," McInemey said, was often missed. It's become, unfortunately, a sort of hot consumer item in itself, and some people take it as an endorsement of the

"A lot of the people the book is based on,"
Ellis said, "either aren't reading it because they don't read or are reading it as a travel guide to L.A. nightlife. They take it as a kind of advocacy for their lifestyle. I've gone to a few clubs lately and people come up to me and say, 'Did you really go there and do that? Sounds like fun.'"

FOR FUN AND PROFIT

Avoiding Taxi Rip-Offs: Rules and Exceptions

by Roger Collis

uGH THOMAS, British historian and author of "The Spanish Civil War," opined that fascist parties are composed primarily of waiters and taxi drivers—"the middle classes at their worst." Whether this is true or not, both are sedulous practitioners of W. C. Fields's admonition never to give a sucker an even break.

But there's something about driving a taxi, in particular, that seems to bring out the worst. Perhaps it's because many are self-employed, streetwise entrepreneurs, working long hours, stuck in traffic with little thanks from clients. Whether out of anger, frustration or innate cupidity, many have acquired a mastery of personalized asset-stripping that would leave the most rapacious corporate raider gasping with admiration. Some, like those in New York, have developed rudeness to an art form, although the French have little to learn in this respect.

Admiration, however, can turn to paranoia when you arrive in New York for the first time and are taken from JFK to Manhattan by way of New Jersey for $200 instead of the normal $25 or so. (A Nigerian recently got a $200 ride from one terminal to another at JFK, no more than a short walk.) There are similar cantionary tales of those marvelous London cabbies."

Of course, not all taxi drivers are crooks. Those in Asia (except for India, where the meters don't work and drivers pursue you into the hotel to haggle for a higher rate) are the most obliging and offer the best value. Singapore taxis offer discounts and taxis in Jakarta are among the world's last great bargains. And taxis in big cities are generally more closely policed and cheaper than elsewhere — Paris, for instance, as opposed to the Côte d'Azur.

Avoid becoming a victim of taxi rip-offs by taking the following precautions:

Observe the military maxim that time spent on reconnaissance is never wasted. Bone up before you arrive in a place for the first time; guide books are mostly useless on this subject, so ask a friend, colleague or a neighborly flight attendant how long it takes and how much it costs by taxi, bus or train from the airport (sometimes it's better to take a taxi direct to the hotel rather than wait in line at the downtown terminal) and whether tips are customary (yes in London and New York, no in Brussels and Copenhagen). Get a street map and acquaint yourself with landmarks, routes and distances.

Travel only in licensed taxis; find out what they look like and if there is more than one kind (as in Mexico, where the expensive sitio cabs with orange stripes work only from a stand, while you flag those with yellow stripes and they cost half as much). Avoid the taxi touts that infest airports and train stations. These are either "cowboys" with no meter, or legal but expensive limo-type cabs. Watch out at some airports, such as Bangkok, which have a taxi-desk for cars that cost four or five times as much as those in the rank outside. In Jamaica, there are two classes of taxi, for locals and for visitors.

 Make sure your taxi has a meter, that it is switched on and zeroed at the start of the journey and that it is visible. Be suspicious if a telephone taxi arrives with an unreasonably large sum aheady on the clock. Taxis in some cities, such as Paris and Geneva, have two or more meter rates -higher outside the city limit or at night. Sometimes drivers conveniently forget to change the meter when coming in from the airport. This can double or triple the fare. A favorite trick is to charge a return journey on top of this. Check on "extras" such as this and whether night rates are legal and what they are. When a driver leaps out to open the trunk you can probably expect an extra charge for baggage. Take what you can inside the cab with you. Be wary of accepting a hotel car, especially one with a "bilingual" driver. These can sometimes be viciously expensive; a cab in the street will often do just as well.

• Find out from airport information or the hotel whether there are official rates for certain journeys, such as city center to the airport. Avoid offers to negotiate a price for the trip unless you really know what you are doing. However, in some cities, such as London, the meter applies only within a 20-mile radius of the center (Heathrow is on the meter), so you may have to agree on a fare (do this before entering the taxi). A leaflet put out by the British Airports Authority gives the rules of the game and a list of suggested fares. If in doubt, ask a traffic warden on the terminal forecourt. London has a number of "minicab" companies (one is run by women for women) that operate on the basis of a fixed fare between their home base and your destination. Although they do not have meters, they can sometimes be cheaper than regular cabs for extended journeys outside the metropolitan area.

• It's often hard to know whether you are

• It's often hard to know whether you are being taken on a circuitous itinerary. Establish your credibility by brandishing a map and pointing to the address. Have the address written out, especially if you don't speak the language. This is important in a city like Tokyo. There is nothing more daunting than being launched into an uncomprehending city with a driver who speaks not one word of English, who has been briefed by the hotel porter and whom you suspect is losing his way.

Sharing a taxi can sometimes make sense—in Washington, for example. But try to be sure there is no route conflict or you may end up as the last passenger paying a huge amount for a wide detour.
 Taxi drivers are notoriously mean about

Taxi drivers are notoriously mean about making change, often in order to extort a larger tip when you leave the cab in exasperation. So make sure you have plenty of small denomination bills.

• Be aware of the shop-switch scam in countries such as Thailand: You ask the hotel dispatcher to direct your driver to a certain shop and he directs it to another, either one owned by his brother or one that pays him a hefty commission. This can apply to restaurants and nightchubs as well. Cairo, where there seems to be a conspiracy of misinformation, has endless permutations of this game.

• If you do have reason to believe you've been taken for a ride, it's wise to wait until you leave the cab before remonstrating with the driver. An American businesswoman took a cab back to her hotel one evening in the center of Paris. She knew the journey was no more than 50 francs but the driver demanded 200. Not speaking French, she wrote the word "police" on a piece of paper, whereupon the driver locked the doors and set his Doberman on her. She paid.

The worst horror stories are from Africa (Anglophone countries are said to be the worst). Meters are just redundant instrumentation; there's not even the pretense of sticking to an agreed fare, and being beaten up and robbed by the driver or hijacked en route are not unheard of. Having a knife at your throat is the ultimate rip-off.

In a city like Lagos, never hail an unknown taxi (ask the hotel management, not the desk clerk) and make sure that the car you ordered is really the one you ordered. The only safe way is to be picked up by a company driver. In fact, that's not bad advice wherever you are.

TRAVEL

Vienna, From A to Z

by Paul Hofmann

LBERTINA — A visit to the world's largest graphic collection in the 180-year-old former palace of an archduke at 1 Augustiner Strasse (tel: 52.42.32), near the State Opera, is always worthwhile. The sullen gray building contains 45,000 drawings, watercolors and etchings, including works by Dürer, Rembrandt, Raphael, Michelangelo and Titian, and a million prints from five centuries, which are displayed in rotation. Open Monday, Tuesday and Thursday from 10 A.M. to 4 P.M., Wednesday from 10 to 6, Friday from 10 to 2, Saturday and Sunday from 10 to 1.

REAKFAST — It is included in the rates of almost all hotels. The breakfast offered by coffeehouses at 50 to 80 schillings ($2.50 to $4) features good coffee or tea, the omnipresent roll called Semmel, a croissant, butter, jam and a softboiled egg. Some Viennese cling to their traditional Gabelfrühstück (fork breakfast) at around 11 A.M., with a couple of frankfurters, a small goulash or kidney and eggs with a beer at a tavern for 80 schillings or so.

→ OFFEEHOUSES — They continue to outlive their periodic obituaries. To habitues the coffeehouses are havens away from home, places to read newspapers and magazines free, pull off business deals, make or receive telephone calls, play chess or cards, muse, write letters or poetry, flirt and even drink coffee. The beverage comes in more than a dozen varieties, from a "large cup, brown" to espresso to Turkish, at 20 to 40 schillings, which entitles the customer to linger for hours and use all the available amenities. Snacks and simple warm dishes are also served in most coffeehouses. To the foreign visitor these places offer a chance to get a bite or a drink and observe a quintessential and enduring aspect of Viennese life. A few favorites: Frauenhuber, 6 Himmelp-fortgasse (52.43.23); Prückel, 24 Stubenring (52.61.15), in business since 1903; Sirk, 53 Kärntnerstrasse (52.73.79), a fancy Art Nouveau revival near the State Opera; Sperl, 11

In the Café Museum.

Gumpendorfer Strasse (56.41.58), once the haunt of Franz Lehar, now designated as a historic landmark.

ANUBE — A visitor may see most of Vienna's major sights and yet never gimpse the mighty stream that Johann Strauss celebrated. The Danube Canal, a domesticated arm skirting the inner city on its northeast, is a reminder that Europe's second-longest river (after the Volga) once flowed much closer to the city's core. The best view of the river is from the Kahlenberg, the 1,585-foot-high "house mountain" from which, on clear days, one can see downstream as far as Czechoslovakia and Hungary. From that hill, the Danube actually looks blue if the light is right.

NGLISH — It is taught in Austria starting at the elementary-school level. This, and the dominance of American lyrics in the programs of Austria 3, the rock station that is also popular in the neighboring Communist countries, explain why many younger Viennese understand English.

REUD — 19 Berggasse is a nondescript building in a sloping street near the neo-Renaissance main building of Vienna University. Sigmund Freud lived in the house for many years, and wrote many of his books and received his disciples and patients there. The study where the first couch of psychoanalysis stood is now a Freud Museum (31.15.96), open 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. Monday through Friday, 9 to 3 Saturday and Sunday.

N REEN BELT — The Viennese get their excellent water from Alpine springs and can reach vast forests, grasslands and wooded hills with a streetcar ride. The Vienna Woods stretch from the Kahlenberg, on the city's northern outskirts. to beyond the resort town of Baden where Mozart and Beethoven took the waters. In the city's east the huge Prater grounds and, across the Danube, the Lobau wildlife refuge provide additional green spaces. Wellmarked hiking paths crisscross the Vienna Woods; a tavern or inn is never far away. Get a map of the public transportation system for 25 cents at its information office in the Opernpassage, the underpass near the State Opera, and look up streetcars or buses to any point near the Green Belt.

APSBURGS — The Viennese wince when they see this English spelling for the Habsburgs, the family that for more than six centuries ruled over vast domains from their city. A visitor from outer space might think they still do. Pictures of Emperor Franz Joseph as a whiskered patriarch and of his Empress, Elisabeth, as a newlywed, are everywhere. The show windows of bookstores are filled with the latest additions to the interminable Hapsburg literature. The Hofburg, the sprawling former imperial residence in the heart of the city, and the summer palace of Schönbrunn, on the western outskirts, are sight-seeing musts. Demel's, the renowned confectioners near the Hofburg, and other prestige firms proclaim themselves purveyors to an imperial court that vanished in 1918.

NFORMATION — Before plotting their program, visitors can stop at the office of the Tourist Board in the underpass near the State Opera. English-speaking women there hand out free folders listing museums, hotels, restaurants, coffeehouses, taverns and other sights and facilities, and offer advice on special events and guided tours. Open 9 A.M. to 7 P.M. daily.

EWISH VIENNA — Only a few thousand Jews live in the city today as compared with perhaps 300,000 in the days before Hitler. The Jewish contributions to arts, science and civilization — especially during the intellectual brilliance of fin-desiècle Vienna from about 1880 to 1910 — are substantial and indelible. The center of Jewish life today is in the historic ghetto between the Hoher Markt and the Danube Canal. The main synagogue, built in 1828, is at 4 Seitenstettengasse, the Jewish Community Center next door at No. 2.

The nearby Judengasse (Jews' Lane), which until the Nazi years was the place to buy second-hand clothing, is now lined with jean shops. The entire former ghetto has lately become a swinging neighborhood with discotheques, cafes and taverns, patrolled around the clock by policemen ever since terrorists attacked the congregation in the synagogue some time ago.

Synagogue some time ago.

Kosher restaurants: Arche Noah, 2 Judengasse (63.13.74), and Orthodox Kosher Restaurant. 3 Hollandstrasse (33.35.65), in the Leopoldstadt district beyond the Danube Canal, which in the 16th century was assigned to the Jewish population because the old ghetto was overflowing.

IDS — The eyes of many Viennese melt when they look at their own or somebody else's dog but harden whenever a child is heard instead of just scen. Don't expect much friendliness when your travel-tired or bored small fry get restless. Aware of children's needs, the city has built an impressive network of playgrounds, swimming pools, libraries and clubs for the young. For foreign visitors with offspring, the nearest public playground may be in the Stadtpark, the splendid gardens between the Hilton Wien and Inter-Continental Hotels. Except in deep winter, the 300-year-old Prater amusement park with its merry-gorounds, fun houses, roller coasters and 210-foot-high Riesenrad (Ferris wheel) will delight children.

ODEN — Vienna's young generation has long embraced the international blue-jeans and casuals fashion, but many middle-aged and elderly people look as if they had just come down from a mountain fastness, out of deep woods or from a village wedding — loden coats, dirndls, green stockings, hunters' hats with tufts from the coat of the chamois. Loden makes a good souvenir and is good all-weather wear. A large assortment of Alpine wear can be found at Loden-Plankl, 6 Michaeler Platz.

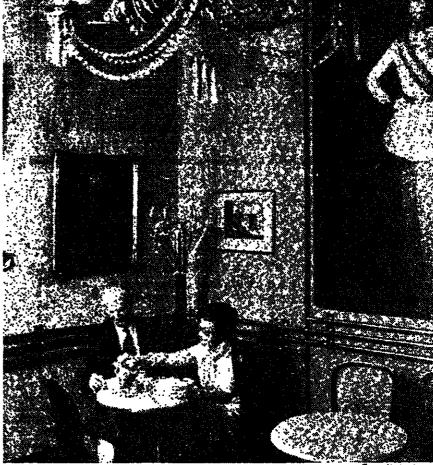

USIC — There is hardly a day without some high-quality concert, recital, opera or operetta performance, or sacred music. There is the bonus of visiting the places that evoke memories of Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, the Strausses, Brahms, Bruckner, Mabler, Schönberg and other composers. Tickets to the subscription concerts, about one a month, by the Vienna Philharmonic, one of the world's great orchestras, are sold out before the season begins, and it requires high-level connections, dealings with scalpers, or last-minute luck at the box office to get into the Musikverein, the Philharmonic's home. For the countless other musical offerings, watch the cylindrical columns along the Ring and in other strategic locations on which notices of forthcoming events are posted. If box offices are sold out, try one of the licensed ticket brokers in the city center; they are entitled to charge a commission.

Good church music — usually one of the famous masses by the Viennese composers — may be heard at the 11 A.M. service Sundays in St. Augustine's, entrance from Josefsplatz. Admission free, voluntary contributions welcomed. Watch also the music announcements posted outside St. Stephen's Cathedral and and many other churches. The Vienna Boys' Choir can be heard at the 9:15 A.M. Mass in the Court Chapel (Hofkapelle), in the Hofburg, every Sunday from mid-September to late June. Reserved seats cost 50 to 300 schillings (phone 52.12.86). The Volksoper specializes in light opera

The Volksoper specializes in light opera and classical Viennese operetta. The Theater an der Wien, Linke Wienzeile, built for Mozart's last librettist, Schikaneder, features Broadway-style musicals. For good jazz, try Jazzland, 29 Franz Josefs-Kai (63.25.75), from 9 P.M. until 1 A.M. most nights.

AMES — Business signs and the telephone directory teem with Navratils, Magyarys, Zawilinskis and other non-Germanic names. Austria's current government chief, Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, is of Croatian origin. For hundreds of years, the city was a Central European melting pot, and to a degree still is. The latest newcomers are refugees from Poland and many young Arabs who have carved out a near-monopoly in newspaper-hawking.

PERA — During its 300-day season the State Opera performs daily except on Feb. 6, 1986, when the labled Opera Ball is held, and on Good Friday. Prices range from 1,800 schillings a seat at a gala performance to 15 schillings for standing room in the gallery; 500 to 600 schillings will buy a good seat for most performances. Tickets can be bought up to seven days before each performance from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. Monday through Saturday, 9 to noon Sunday, at 3 Hanuschgasse, near the State Opera (5324,2655).

Nearly 500 standing room tickets are available on a first-come, same-day basis regardless of whether all seats are sold (for most performances they are). The box-office window for standing room opens two hours before curtain time, but the line on some days starts at 6 A.M.

Big wheel in the Prater.

Police — Relatively few policemen and policewomen in their dark green uniforms are seen in the city, but street crime is almost nonexistent. It is safe to walk in any neighborhood at any hour. The emergency police number is 133.

UASI-VIENNESE — Old-timers will tell you it's not enough to have been born in the city — one must be a gelerater Wiener, a person trained to cope with the pitfalls and ambiguities of Viennese ways. This class includes streetwise natives and foreigners who have lived in the city for some time and by trial and error have gathered enough experience to hold their own. John Irving, the author of "The World According to Garp." may qualify. Many of the most authentic Viennese hail from Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary or Yugoslavia.

ESTAURANTS — Stick to what Viennese chefs can do best: Tafelspitz, the boiled, tender cuts of beef that Emperor Franz Joseph is said to have eaten every day; schnitzel; smoked pork with dumplings and sauerkraut; venison in season; braised onion steak; fried chicken, and those rich desserts that justify a pre-emptive crash diet.

Following are a few recommended places in the gemütlich category: Griechenbeisl, II Fleischmarkt (63.19.41); Leupold, 7 Schottengasse (63.93.81); Stadtbeisl, 21 Naglergasse (63.33.23). A full meal with beer or a carafe of wine will run to about 600 schillings for two in any of the three.

HOPPING — Kärntnerstrasse and the Graben, which meet near the cathedral, are the smartest shopping streets. However, most Viennese and practically all the many visitors from neighboring Hungary who look for merchandise not available at home favor the department stores and other businesses along Mariahilfer Strasse, a busy thoroughfare leading to Schönbrunn palace. Shopping hours are from 8 or 8:30 A.M. to 6 P.M. Monday through Friday, 8 or 8:30 A.M. to noon or 12:30 P.M. Saturday. Stores are closed Saturday afternoon and Sunday.

TILES — Vienna has a Byzantine mania for titles. A Herr Professor expects to be addressed as such, and will take his title to the grave, as the headstones in the cemeteries show. His wife is automatically a Frau Professor. Every waiter is a Herr Ober, whether or not he is the head waiter, and about everyone wearing eyeglasses is a Herr Doktor.

a sign with the letter U indicates a subway; as sign with the letter U indicates a subway stop. The six-year-old subway is safe, graffiti-free and usually uncrowded. Streets in the city's east and in other neighborhoods are being torn up, with ensuing surface traffic bottlenecks, as a new east-west subway line, U-3, is being built.

TERBOTEN — It translates as "prohibited," and many things are. Signs in the city's lovingly tended parks warn that it's verboten to step on the lawns. "Eintritt Verboten" has a sterner ring than "No Entry." Visitors used to jaywalking at home will face outraged stares and may even provoke mutterings. Dropping gum wrappers or tissues on sidewalks is a no-no too. Small wonder that to many foreigners the streets of Vienna seem eerily neat.

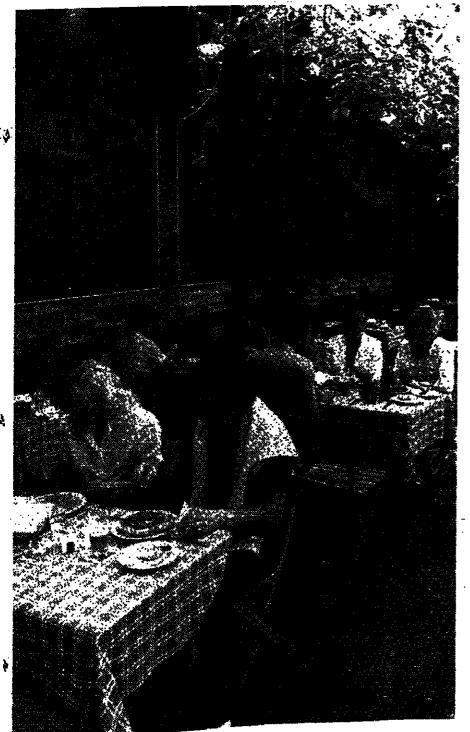

IEN — The city's name in German. It is also the name of a little river that rises in the Vienna Woods about 15 miles west of the city, runs through the western and federal district — covered and built over for long stretches — and joins the Damube Canal at the easternmost point of the Ring.

III, XIIII — Such inscriptions on chunks of stone dug up in the construction of the new subway line are additional testimonials to Vienna's Roman past, destined to join the many archaeological finds in the museums. The crack 13th Legion, and later the 14th, were garrisoned in what was to become Vienna from about A.D. 100 to 500. Vindobona, as the encampment was called, secured the Roman Empire's Danube frontier, and held barracks for 6,000 troops. Roman officers' billets excavated near St. Stephen's can be visited from 10 A.M. to 12:15 P.M. and 1 to 4:30 Tuesday through Sunday. The entrance is at 3 Hoher Markt; admission free.

IDDISH — Listening to the Viennese talking among themselves one frequently hears words derived from Hebrew or Yiddish. No other branch of the German linguistic family has drawn so heavily on Jewish roots. Few of the Viennese who pepper their everyday conversations with Yiddish are aware of the idiom's origins. The Viennese dialect, incidentally, is also replete with terms borrowed from the Slavic tongues, Hungarian and Italian, a legacy of the multi-ethnic Hapsburg monarchy. To a German from Hamburg or Berlin, thick Viennese makes almost as little sense as Algonquian would to a New Yorker.

AHLKNOPF — A device that invariably baffles the foreigner who for the first time tries to use a pay telephone in Vienna. After putting the requisite one-shilling (5-cent) coin for a local call into the slot and dialing or punching the number, an answer may be heard, but after a couple of hellos the party at the other end will maddeningly hang up. The explanation is that the caller failed to press the red "pay button" and therefore could not be heard. Press the black button to get your schilling back, call again, and the moment you hear an answer press the red Zahlknopf.

Princess Diana will make the Fair 'A Right Royal Occasion'

he setting for an antique fair is all important. The Burlington House Fair, originally the British Antique Henry VIII after Holbein; as Dealers' Fair, can expect to command the attention of buyers, dealers and the public as this year it is being held in the historic setting of the Royal Academy of Arts in Piccadilly.

It will also be a 'right royal occasion'. Not only is it being opened on September 11 by the Prince and Princess of Wales, but the theme of the fair marks the Quincentenary of the founding of the royal House of Tudor ton House Fair, which alter-(1485 - 1985).

Several items have been loaned by members of the British royal family. Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother, patron of the Fair, is lending a George III gold snuff box with the royal cypher in diamonds, and The Queen is providing three Derby biscnit porcelain figures, modelled on a painting by Zoffany, while the newly formed Derby Porcelain International Society will display 84 rare pieces from more than 30 private collections.

Presented by arrangement with the Burlington Magazine, the Fair stays open until September 22. On the opening day, from 5pm until 8pm, admission is £5 and afterwards £4, including an illustrated handbook.

Another major antiques Holland, and Berko Fine show in London is the 1985 Park Lane Hotel Antiques Fair from October 1 to 6. This, too, will have royal connections. As part of the quin-centennial of the founding of the Tudor dynasty the Board of Governors of the Museum of London has agreed to show a selection of the museum's Tudor collection of plate and pieces from the Cheapside hoard of jewellery displayed against a background of the Braun and Hogenburg map of mid-16th century London. There will also be a portrait of Queen Elizabeth I, known as the 'Sieve' portrait. This is one of the major works of George Gower (1540-1596). In it the Queen wears a three quarter length red velvet dress and, as always, is festooned with jewels. She holds the Sieve, the symbol of Tuccia, the Vestal Virgin.

The rest of the exhibition, which is being opened by Sally, Duchess of Westminster, will show English and Continental furniture, paintings, ceramics, silver and jewellery, clocks, prints, textiles, and art nouveau and deco in the spacious ballroom of the Park Lane Hotel.

One of the most fascinating displays should be the collection of toys on loan from the London Toy and Model Museum, including road, rail (the museum claims to have the finest collection of model trains in Europe), air, sea, novelty and mechanical playthings dating from the 18th century. The museum, which is housed in Craven Hill, not far from Marble Arch, recently won a special judges' award ondon is the centre from which almost every visitor to Britain sets out to explore the rest of the country. There is much to see. But if you wish to visit most places in the shortest time, travelling in your own car is best.

Once it is remembered that they drive on the left (not the right) throughout the British Isles, newcomers will find the standard of driving high, but the signposting not always as good, or as easy to understand, as in many European countries or the US.

Car rental firms have offices in every town and city. All the major companies offer easy form filling, a wide selection of cars and, in many cases, facilities for leaving the vehicle at the point of departure. Some will even collect it from you.

Because many visitors from overseas have families and luggage with them, companies like Town and Country, at Key House, High Street, West Drayton, Middlesex, offer a selection that includes the Mercedes automatic 380SEL, or the Jaguar Sovereign, both at £127 a day, or £765 weekly.

Town and Country also has a fleet of chauffeur driven Rolls. Without doubt a chauffered car makes shopping and visits to the theatre easier, as well as being excellent for longer journeys. Visitors can then concentrate upon the changing scenery, not the crowded roads. Chauffeurs not only park the car while you visit a cathedral, or dine in a restaurant, but they also look after any valuables you wish to leave behind.

But as well as visitors and tourists, London has a large population of ex-patriates who either live here because they like it, or because their work is in Britain. For them a right hand drive car, such as the popular BMW 5-series, is essential. Most overseas families in the UK own two, sometimes three, cars depending upon the age of the children. Few are more popular than this range of German built and designed cars which offer space, safety, speed and performance.

Park Lane Export, who are the sole official BMW agent in the U.K. for export sales, specialise in the supply of cars for shipment all over the world at factory tourist prices. Personal Export needs to be carried out correctly if the advantages are to be maximized and problems avoided: Park Lane's very professional staff have the necessary expertise to meet these objectives and their service extends to assistance for customers even after delivery overseas.

An equally popular continental car is the Mercedes. If you want a car that is different go to 65/67 Park Lane where Trasco concentrate on coachbuilt Mercs, each built to individual requirements. Extra seats, larger boots for more luggage or company equipment, bullet proof glass, are all part of everyday jobs for this Swiss based company which, despite offering a product in the de luxe class, has a pricelist from the bargain basement.

Overseas visitors, or residents, in London can purchase a 500SEL Mercedes for $40,000, instead of the $52,000 it would cost in the US. A president size seven seater 1000SEL sells at approximately $120,000 in America. In London the Trasco price is $85,000.

Obviously, these are not cars for everyman. But the Volvo increasingly is. They are among the most popular buys by American servicemen stationed in Britain, as well as for members of the diplomatic corps and business community in London. Today the range extends from the small runabout

Users Can Pick and Choose With 'Hypertext' Programs

By ANDREW POLLACK

New York Times Service ALO ALTO, California — Text written on paper must be in a specific order. This article, for instance, has a mally follow it from beginning to end in sequential

But computer-based information need not be bound by such restrictions imposed by paper. With computers it is possible to have individual small packets of information that can be called up in any order the reader desires. The concept has been called nonsequential text, or "hypertext," and it is slowly gaining adherents in computer science. adherents in computer science.

The concept is not an easy one to grasp, but one analogy might be tours through a museum. Some provide a single Toute that takes a visitor past all the exhibits. Others would concentrate on certain exhibits and bypass others.

Similarly, an electronic hypertext document would offer choices. For instance, a person reading a hypertext article about a company would have a choice of how much detail he wanted on the company's history and how much on finances. The concepts have been used in some electronic novels and computer games, in which the plot changes depending on choices made by the player.

But hypertext would also allow users to link different documents. Encyclopedias, for instance, now often contain cross-references to other articles, which in turn contain cross-references to still others. But following the cross-references is tedious. With a hypertext encyclopedia, a reader could press a button and jump to the relevant part of the cross-referenced article and from there to another cross-referenced article.

In short, one could hop from article to article following a given idea. Similarly, instead of just seeing a reference to another book in a footnote, a reader could move immediately to the relevant Dart of that book

HIS system is more advanced than traditional data banks, which permit the retrieval of documents quickly, but do not allow movement from one document to the middle of

The first hypertext system was developed in the early 1960s by Douglas C. Engelbart, then at the Stanford Research Institute. As part of the same project, Mr. Engelbart also developed a device for controlling the computer that is only now coming into widespread use—the mouse. Mr. Engelbart's system is marketed by Tymshare, now part of McDonnell Douglas, under the name

Augment.

The term hypertext was coined in the mid-1960s by Ted Nelson, an author and futurist. His attempt at creating such a system, known as Xanadu, has foundered for lack of financing. It is only now, however, that the computer technology has improved enough to allow such programs to become more widespread, and a few systems are being developed. At Brown University, a hypertext system has been developed to work on the Maciniosh computer. Next year it will be tested in an English

This year's topic was "The U.S. Dollar - Recent Development, Outlook and Policy Options." or, as the Bank of England's emissary more acutely put it in light of the dollar's recent decline: "The Dollar on the Rockies."

They came from all parts of the country to what Bruce K. MacLaury, head of the private research

New Home Sales Increase in U.S.

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - Sales of new homes in the United States climbed 1.4 percent in July, pushing housing sales to their highest level in almost two years, the government reported

New single-family homes were sold at an annual rate of 704,000 last month, the highest since a pace of 767,000 sales in December 1983, according to the report from the departments of Commerce and Housing and Urban Development.

Even more encouraging was the fact that the government substantially raised its estimates of housing sales from April through June. Sales for June originally had been reported as a 0.1-percent decline. But the new report revised that to a strong 2.2-percent increase following a 4.6-percent gain in May. Housing sales had been a major disappointment to analysis because of the reported June weakness.

China to Launch Probe Of Economic Crimes

BELIING - China's state council has ordered an investigation that will seek to put an end to tax evasion and economic crimes, the overseas edition of the People's Daily said Thursday.

The Communist Party newspaper said that the eight-month investigation, to be conducted by the Ministry of Finance, will cover state-owned and privately held en-

The auditor general, Lu Peijian, told the newspaper in an interview published on its front page Wednesday that his office had the leading to the control of the co checked the accounts of more than 24,000 units and enterprises across the country and discovered numerous cases of fraud and errors in accounting.

Mr. Lu cited a case of fraud in a county of Shanxi Province. The county reported a deficit of 940,000 yuan in 1983. But an audit revealed that the county was "juggling the figures" to hide a surplus of about 350,000 yuan.

The problem of tax evasion has become more serious than it once was because, with the process of economic modernization and decentralization, the state is more dependent on taxes for its income and less dependent on income coming from state enterprises. These enter-prises have become increasingly free from government control.

China's foreign exchange reserves dropped sharply toward the end of last year, partly as a result of uncontrolled loans and heavy expenditures on imported consumer goods.

Mr. Lu said that the government planned to dramatically increase the number of auditors by almost

NEW YORK — The narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, M-1, rose $2.8 billion in the week ended Aug. 19, the Federal Reserve Board reported Thursday. The rise was above most expectations.

The Fed said M-1, which comprises currency in circulation, deposits in checking accounts and nonbank travelers checks, rose to a seasonally adjusted $606 billion from $603.2 billion previous week. The latest increase puts M-1 well above the upper limit of the Fed's targeted growth range for the monetary aggregate.

Wolvo Pretax Earnings Down 8% in First Half

By Juris Kaza ial Herold Tribune SIOCKHOLM — AB Volvo, the Swedish automotive, energy and food group, said Thursday that pretax earnings in the first half of 1985 fell 8 percent from an unusually strong period a year earlier, to 4.26 billion kronor ($515.8 million), from 4.62 billion kronor.

Second-quarter earnings rose sightly from a year earlier, to 2.05 billion kronor from 2.02 billion from 2.212 billion kronor in the first quarter of 1985, Volvo said in its interim statement.

First-half sales were down 3 per-cent, to 42.28 billion kronor from 43.62 billion kronor a year earlier. Excluding oil trading, where activity has been deliberately cut, and Volvo BM, a construction equipment subsidiary no longer consolidated; sales of its main industrial divisions were up 12 percent, Volvo

Car sales rose 15 percent in the half, to 18.48 billion kronor, and in the quarter were up 21 percent, to 9.51 billion kronor.

It said first-half truck sales were up 5 percent, to 7.98 billion kronor, hile food sales rose 12 percent, to 584 billion kronor.

Analysts said the results were good and in line with expectations, considering that extraordinary factors boosted last year's first-half earnings.

Anders Lindquist, a partner in Merchant, Grundstrom & Partners Fondkomission AB, a Stockholm securities brokerage, said second-quarter earnings were "in the middle of various expectations."

. Mr. Lindquist said it was likely that Volvo would sharply increase its 1985 dividend from the 5.40 kronor it paid out in 1984.

Before the sale, MHI held 595 million shares, or about 85 percent of Mitsubishi Motor. MHI will reduce its ownership in Mitsubishi Motor to 25 percent in the year ending March 31, 1987.

At another major Stockholm brokerage, an analyst termed the results "fantastic" compared with Volvo's earnings levels just a few

"It is a return to more normal

Volvo said that demand for passenger cars in North America — its biggest market — increased during the first half. Worldwide deliveries, however, were little changed at 203,000.

It said worldwide deliveries of its 700-series models more than doubled in the half, to 70,000 from 28,600 last year. Mr. Lindquist said that the lower dollar would cut margins on U.S. sales, but at the same time would reduce the group's debt-service costs on dollar borrowings. In addition, Volvo was now selling more higher-margin passenger cars, such as its 700-series, he observed.

He also predicted that the Deutsche mark would appreciate faster against the weakening dollar than the krona, so that "the Germans— BMW, Audi and Mercedes - will suffer more than Volvo, which will

Profits in Japan Seen Declining In Current Year

Reuters TOKYO - Profits of Japan's major companies are likely to be lower in the fiscal year ending next March 31, the first decline in three years, the Wako Research Institute of Economics said Thursday in a survey.

The study, covering 421 companies listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, predicted that combined profits for the year would fall 4.1 percent from a year earlier, to 4.6 trillion yen (about $19.4 billion) from 4.8

trillion.

Wako said combined sales are estimated to rise 3.3 percent, to 205.9 trillion yen from 199.3 trillion in 1984-85, it said. Both sales and current profit projections for were revised lower from Wako's June survey of the same companies, which account for 41 percent of Japanese companies listed on the main section of the exchange. At that time, the institute forecast a 5.3-percent rise in current profits and a 4.6-percent gain in sales. The downward revision resulted from the worsening market environment for the electronics industry, especially semiconductor makers, which had previously led the Japanese economy's expansion, a Wako economist said.

TOKYO - Nine of the trading stevedore charges, the sources said. houses that financed the construction of more than 100 ships operated by Sanko Steamship Co. have agreed to ask a court official to pay the debts of Sanko ships detained in foreign ports, trading house sources said Thursday.

They will put the request to Mituhide Miyata, appointed by the Tokyo district court to handle Sanko Steamship's affairs until the court decides how to handle its application for protection from its creditors. The sources said the houses also will ask that Mr. Miyata take steps to avoid future detention of the ships.

The Sanko group, which says it owns 27 ships and operates 217 on charter, has debts totaling about 520 billion yen ($2.2 billion). It filed for protection from creditors on Aug. 13 — such filings usually are followed by the appointment of a receiver to preside over the company's recovery or decide if it should be liquidated.

After the filling, several Sanko ships were detained in foreign ports as stevedoring companies and bunker oil suppliers demanded cash payment for their services. The sources said that some of the ships were released after Sanko or the cargo holders paid the debts.

CBS Says it Plans To Sell 3 Units of Publishing Group

NEW YORK -- CBS Inc. is trying to sell off three of its publishing units — Holt, Rinehart & Winto sell are Bostitch of East Greenston's general books. Praeger and wich, Rhode Island; Dalmo Victor avoidance systems. Winston-Seaberry - according to a company spokeswoman.

Formal invitations to buy these publishing companies were sent out by CBS this month to a number of prospective purchasers in the publishing field.

In May, CBS's Educational and Professional Publishing Division dismissed 65 employees. The three units that have been put on the block employ about 125 people. In the last few years, a number of editors have left Holt, Rinehart & Winston for other companies.

Blue Circle Industries PLC Posts 5.5% Decline in Profit

LONDON - Blue Circle Industries PLC, the British cement producer, reported Thursday that pretax profit in the first half fell 5.5 percent from a year earlier, to £45 million ($63 million) from £47.6 million, because of higher interest charges and unfavorable currencyexchange rates.

The decline came on a slight increase in sales, to £427.9 million, from £426.3 million, the company said.

Blue Circle said its first half pretax profit would have been £7.3 million higher if results had been translated at average exchange rates for the period rather than rates on June 30. Higher interest charges mainly reflected two major plant modernizations in Britain, it said. Extraordinary charges of £2 million, down from £4.8 million, were charged against pretax profits to reflect the cost of employee layoffs. British cement deliveries of 3.9 million tons in the half were about the same as last year, it said, and are not expected to differ much in the

The acquisition of Atlantic Cement in the United States for $145 million, completed at the end of May, made a positive profit contribution in June, the statement said. Other U.S. units also performed well in the period, it said without elaborating.

Blue Star said that a 4.5-percent U.K. cement-price increase from June 1, the first for nearly 3½ years, will partly offset cost increases. But the full benefit will not be felt until 1986 because of the continuing cost of modernizing key plants, it said.

The company said its stake in Blue Circle Ltd. of South Africa will be reduced to 42 percent from 50.3 percent at the end of this month because the unit has increased the number of its shares outstanding. The unit's results have been impaired because of the country's severe economic downturn and the declining rand, it added.

France Plans To Ease Rule On Currency

The Associated Press

PARIS - The French government plans to relax, in coming weeks, exchange controls for direct investment abroad by French residents, a senior Finance Ministry official said Thursday. The official, who insisted on anonymity, said that the measures involved lowering the percentage of foreign in-vestment that must be financed in (oreign currencies.

Residents currently wishing to make a capital investment outside the European Community must fi-nance 75 percent of the total amount in foreign currency. A similar restriction affected investment inside the EC until the government lowered the minimum amount to 50 percent in last November.

The official said that the new measures being studied would probably try to bring laws for non-EC countries into line with those affecting investments in the nine other EC countries.

France gradually has been lowering barriers to capital transfers es-tablished after the Socialists' election victory in May 1981. But most of the measures have been largely symbolic, and the government has maintained many controls severely restricting the margin of maneuver of importers and exporters in their foreign-currency management.

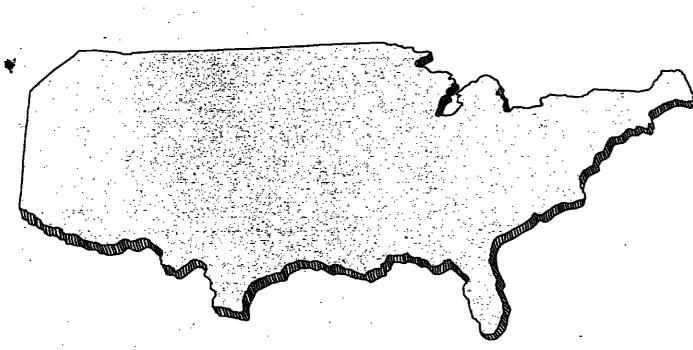

Most French corporate treasurers favor legislation allowing free access to the currency-futures marker. That would permit them to hedge foreign-currency risks more

But senior government officials have indicated that such access was unlikely to be granted, at least before the legislative elections set for March 1986, because of concern about the short-term negative impact that such a move would have on France's balance of payments.

Finance Minister Pierre Beregovoy has said that the government's ultimate goal was to lift exchange controls completely. But he has cautioned that this would only happen in stages.

If your market is corporate America, Forbes will put you on the map.

If you want to make your mark on corporate America, it helps to make an impression on its leaders. And in the 1984 study by a leading independent researcher, Market Facts, Inc., Forbes was shown to be preferred reading by more corporate officers in 1,000 of America's largest service and industrial companies. In comparison with Fortune and Business Week, Forbes was judged to be overall favorite by 44%, versus 29% for Business Week and 19% for Fortune.

When regular readers were asked which of the three reflects best the excitement of business, Forbes had twice the scores of the other two. And when asked which of the three stands for "free enterprise," 71% named Forbes, compared with 13% for Fortune and 7% for Business

These results confirm surveys done over the past fifteen years showing that more officers in big business read Forbes regularly than either Fortune or Business Week. As the graphs so eloquently show, Forbes is the most cost-effective business magazine for reaching America's most effective executives. If you want to make an impression on this elite, not only is it good business for you to put your advertising in Forbes, it's bound to be good for your business.

Brazilian Official Expects 14% Inflation in August

The Associated Press BRASILIA — Finance Minister Dilson Fun-aro, confirming dismal forecasts in the press, said Thursday that inflation for August would be 14 percent, the worst single month in Brazil's be 14 percent, the worst single month in Brazil's history.

That would bring the annual rate to about 227 percent, up 10 points from July. Mr. Funaro, who took office Monday after a major shakeup of top Brazilian economic officials, told reporters Thursday that "we are going to to work hard, maintain price controls and take operational measures that really allow us to contain inflation."

Brazil the Third World's most indebted na-

Brazil, the Third World's most indebted nation — with about $103 billion in debts — has repeatedly told the International Monetary Fund and private foreign banks that it will reduce inflation. The inflation rate here has been over 200

ESCORTS & GUIDES

Can Iacocca Keep Chrysler in High Gear?

By John Holusha New York Times Service DETROIT—Lee A. Iacocca has become a best-selling author and his Chrysler Corp. is making more money on each car and truck that it sells than even the mighty General Motors Corp. A company that six years ago was tectering on the edge of bankruptcy and begging for federal help has emerged as a small, effective and feisty combatant in the increasingly comparation autothe increasingly competitive automobile business.

Now Chrysler is again at a cross-roads of sorts, and Mr. Iacocca's reputation is again on the line. The two key things he did to save the company—pare costs and create a family of cars based on the K-Car may not serve to keep Chrysler healthy. Already the United Auto-mobile Workers union is demanding that Chrysler give back more of the millions of dollars in wage concessions that the workers had agreed to when the company was sliding. If negotiations go badly, the union could strike when its contract expires Oct. 15. Meanwhile, the K-Car family by far Chrysler's main product line is vulnerable to rising sales of small Japanese cars and to the resurgence of the American driver's taste for big cars. "If the market shifts, they could be in trouble," warned Harvey Heinbach, an analyst with Merrill Lynch & Co. Mr. lacocca seems unfazed by the doubters.

He has larger and sportier cars in the wings, and some already in production, which he expects will woo a younger, more affluent buyer than the current Chrysler models. He is expanding into new businesses, paying $637 million to buy Gulfstream Aerospace Corp., a maker of executive aircraft. And he has his manufacturing specialists working on the Liberty project, which, like GM's publicitydrenched Saturn project, is an effort to cut $2,000 out of the cost of each small car by using advanced. production technologies. And he remains, as always, the supersalesman, whose television commercials helped persuade people to buy Chrysler cars when it seemed likely that the company would fail.

Chrysler's future remains in Mr. lacocca's hands. The 61-year-old chief executive has pulled back a bit from day-to-day operations, even taking a month-long vacation this summer. He has moved three executives into an office of the chairman, which shares decisionmaking authority. But Bennett E. Bidwell, executive vice president for marketing and a member of the chairman's office, has quipped: "Lee settles the tie votes - including the 3-0 ties."

Even Mr. Iacocca's severest critics concede that he has shored up Chrysler's bottom line. The company is solidly in the black today — it earned a record $2.4 billion in 1984 and another $1.104 billion in the first six months of this year. Sales, which were $19.6 billion last year, continue to climb. But the fiscal health has come at a price. As part of the process of scaling back to avoid bankruptcy, Chrysler sold virtually all of its overseas operations. That leaves it time when both Ford Motor Co. and GM are more and more becoming global enterprises. Mr. Iacocca has established links with ty to maneuver than his major com-

ANGELS UNAWARES: 20th Century Portraits

By T. S. Matthews. 294 pages. $17.95. Ticknor & Fields, 52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Jonathan Yardley

T. S. MATTHEWS is almost as old as the century and has been witness to much of its excitement and glamour. Born into high privilege as an heir to the Procter & Gamble Co. fortune, he chose journalism over business; beginning with The New Republic in the 1920s, he moved to Time magazine (of which he eventually became managing editor), then entered a career as free-lance writer and memoirist. "Angels Unawares" is his latest venture in this latter pursuit, a collection of brief portraits of men and women — and one Jack Russell terrier — whom Matthews held in higher than customary regard.

They are a mixed lot, and "Angels Unawares" is a mixed book. Its two best chapters are about rather eccentric men for whom Matthews had great if unsentimental affection: John Potter Cuyler, who for a time was Matthews's father-in-law, and Whittaker Chambers, with whom Matthews worked at Time. The less successful chapters, of which, unfortunately, there are quite a number, are brief portraits in which Matthews either fails to bring his subjects to life or does not demonstrate a connection with his subjects sufficiently strong to justify writing about them.

Matthews was an adolescent when he first met Cuyler, who lived in Princeton, New Jersey, with his large family and intermittently conducted an undistinguished career as an artist. His real vocation was as an observer of the passing show and as a consumer of its greatest pleasures, among them good drink and good fellowship. He was given to aphorisms, whether his own ("The only perfect climate is bed") or those of rustic philosophers ("As soon as you get out of bed in the morning, it's ten to one against you"). His family included his wife's uncle, Dr. Alfred Baker, a gentle old fellow of furn habits:

"He insisted on going to the post office to mail his letters, of which he wrote several every day, because he answered all his second-class mail. Again and again Mrs. Cuyler would point out to him that an advertisement from Realsilk Hosiery or Wearever Shirts was not meant to be answered. Dr. Baker was unconvinced.

Solution to Previous Puzzle

This young man has taken the trouble to write to me. Julie, and it is only courteous that should reply to him."

Matthews has a fine hand for anecdotes such as this, and when they present themselves he tells them with the enthusiasm they deserve these include the story of an old maid who asked Albert Einstein's wife if the scientist might be interested in chess and was told, "Jezz? Not in zis house!" He is also skilled at painting balanced portraits of complicated characters, of whom none was more complicated than Whittaker Chambers. On the one hand there was the "air of suppressed melodrama about him," his contemptuous treatment of those he regarded as his intellectual inferiors, his "melodramatic descriptions of Communist methods, especially in the field of international conspiracy." On the other there was the do-mesuc Chambers.

"After the tumult of the Hiss trial, Chambers lived in isolation with his wife and two children on his Maryland farm. I used to go there to see him. I often wished that the people there to see him. I often wished that the people the trial of the second rate of these second rates are those to the second rate of these second rates are those the second rates are the seco mestic Chambers: who were so sure he was a scoundrel, or those: who had doubts of him, could see him at home. with his family or could meet his wife. drank spirits, but whenever I came there was always a bottle of whiskey for me. Esther was a good cook, and those farm meals were feasts. In his own house, Chambers was not the sardonic, warily silent character he seemed out side, but hospitable, relaxed, almost talkative."

These portraits of Cuyler and Chambers:

These portraits of Civiler and Chambers, affectionate yet clear-eyed, are the high more ments of "Angels Unawares." Though there are other good ones, most of the rest tend to fall into predictable categories: passing encounters with the eminent, of the famous-persons-I-have-met variety to which retired journalists are unfortunately addicted; sketching of family members whom Matthews foile to es of family members whom Matthews fails to make interesting to readers not privileged to belong to the family; and portraits of various retainers — chanffeurs, governesses, odd-job-men, bootleggers — that are intended to be affectionate but that succeed primarily in be-

All of them are redeemed, though, by Matthews's sharp eye and smooth prose. Like John-Potter Cuyler he has his view firmly fixed on the human comedy; more often than not be sees through its vanities with clarity, and he describes them with a cranky tolerance that is not without charm. "Angels Unawares" is not a very substantial memoir, but its best moments are good ones indeed.

ON the diagramed deal, North and South reached highly optimistic four-spade contract after North had fol-lowed his original pass with two consecutive negative dou-bles. The club king was led, and South could see little hope. He seemed doomed to lose at least one trump trick and three tricks in the minor suits. He took the club ace and led the spade king. He hoped for a small miracle, and was reward-ed when the queen appeared on his left. East could have won, cashed the diamond ace

Had East found the right defense South would have been left to brood on his decision to take the first trick. The advantage of a holdup was not easy to see at the table, but it would have cut the defenders' communications, as would a club return at the second trick.

Curren Wins Few Hearts in Early Elimination From U.S. Open

If he felt slighted, it probably did not match and a front-row seat where he has match, Curren said the tournament and setting had never been particularly to his liking. It would be understandable for Curren to And he knew that would sound like sour

"I hate the city, the environment and Flushing Meadow," Curren said. "There is noise, the people in the grandstand are never seated and it takes an hour and a half in traffic to get here. It's sickening that with all the money they get from TV, the USTA doesn't build a better facility. The USTA should be shot. And they should drop an Abomb on the place."

This is not the way to endear oneself to the New York fans. It is not the way to go about eliciting rave reviews in the news media. It "Coaches are always telling me that I'm also is not the way the International Man-better than I think. But I look at things agement Group — which represents Curren

"My agents understand Kevin Curren," he said. "It's not important to me to be in the oublic eye. I'm trying to do the best I can and I try to be straightforward. I've always felt that way about Flushing Meadow, and being an American citizen is not going to make the traffic any better."

It would be easy to dismiss Curren as tennis' gray cloud but there is something forum for politics. "I don't consider us legitirefreshing about his honesty even if he mate spokesmen," he said. "We're sportsers keep to themselves in the best interest of tournament. They would be reminded that at doesn't always say things we like to hear. men, not politicians."

There are too many people in public life who smile only for the cameras. And although Curren decided to leave his troubled homeland for economic reasons and not principles, one can understand if not sympathize with the ambivalence he feels. It may be difficult for Curren to feel at home in a country that is becoming increasingly out-spoken about the land where he was born.

"I'm caught on a fence," Curren said. "People in America want me to cut my ties to South Africa. But my youth was spent there. My mother, relatives and a lot of friends are there. I love the wildlife country, so I spend my vacations there."

South Africa's policy of apartheid has made it an outcast in the world sports community. South Africa was excluded from the Olympic Games, and many countries refuse to participate against it in team competition. South African athletes do compete as individuals in sports such as tennis, although Curren and Johan Kriek did the most expedient thing and became American citizens as a precaution against future sanctions.

"I don't agree with the system and believe apartheid should be abolished," Curren said. "It's a shame when people are denied their rights. But I'm not for a one-man, one-vote system yet, either. There are other countries in Africa that were granted this and are having coups and dictatorships."

As an athlete, Curren said he was entitled to his viewpoint. But he does not think that an athlete should use his celebrity status as a

John McEnroe, the defending champion, reached the third round by defeating Martin Wostenholme of Canada, 6-0, 7-6, 6-1, on Thursday. McEnroe had been extended in the first round to a lifth set tiebreak by Shlomo Glickstein before he could pull out the victory. Joakim Nystrom, the 10th seed from Sweden, also reached the third round with a 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, 6-0 decision over Robert Green.

On Wednesday, other men's seeds advanced to the second round with case: No. 2 Ivan Lendl in three quick sets against Jay Lapi-dus; No. 4 Jimmy Connors in four sets against Gary Muller, a South African qualifier, No. 7 Yannick Noah over Jeremy Bates of Britain, and No. 15 Scott Davis over Mas-

OBSERVER Hidden Facts of Life

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — Fifty years ago men wore hats, but now they wear mustaches. You can confirm it by looking at photographs of baseball crowds in the 1930s.

See? Men are wearing hats. No, not all of them, and not all men nowadays wear mustaches, either — but a lot do, enough so we can call this the age of the mustache, just as we could have called the 1930s the age of the hat. So what? So this: How many mustaches do you see in that 1930s crowd? How many hatted heads do you see when you look out the window today?

The answer in both cases is: none. And yet, consider that 80 or 90 years ago, at the dawn of the century, the typical American man were not only a hat, but also a mustache. Are the implications clear, or must I spell them out for

For an entire century — from the golden age of the horse and buggy to the brass age of the interconti-nental ballistic missile — the American man has been the site of an indecisive struggle for supremacy between two powers, the hat and the mustache, which at the century's beginning coexisted in harmony on that rough masculine terrain.

What has been happening over the last century to create this tension between hat and mustache, so similar to the international political tension that has made our century a time of terror?

Certain facts are obvious. It is clear, for example, that the hat and the mustache are both the kind of objects that psychologists call 'adornments of concealment." That is, both purport to be decora-tions of the male body, although their true purpose is to hide an area that the body is not too happy

The hat hides the top of the head; the mustache hides the territory lying between the nostrils and the top lip. Why at different times in history have American men wanted to hide just one and expose

In trying to solve this mystery, psychologists at the Guilsbury Institute used the usual research techniques - laboratory rats in hats, chimoanzees given theatrical pasteon mustaches to play around with,

ANNOUNCEMENTS

and so on — with ludicrous results. Their conclusion: A generation whose father wears a hat but no mustache will always grow a mustache and refuse to wear a hat just to make the old man climb the wall.

and vice versa. What about the generation at the turn of the century, which wore both hat and mustache? Easy, say the Gullsbury researchers: The invention of the telephone made them the first generation that could drive the old man up the wall by keeping the phone tied up day and night; they didn't have to use the hat-and-mustache technique to do

Absurdities of this sort must be expected when you spend your time trying to make a snap-brim ledora stay on a laboratory rat. Such, alas, is the destiny of the laboratory scientist, so blinded by the romance of science that he can not see the dust on a poorly oiled scalp or the razor nick on an illshorn chin.

Yes, this is the sort of stuff that governs the American male's seemingly quixotic shifts between bats mustaches. If we ask ourselves what those "adornments of concealment are trying to hide at vari-ous stages in American history, everything becomes clear. What was the hat concealing in its heyday? Well, that heyday coincided with the era of gooey hair oil. which produced two unhappy effects: (1) when freshly oiled, the hair was apt to give off blinding glare in full sun; (2) the goo attracted thick layers of unpleasant matter floating in the air, including gnats and cinders.

Note that the disappearance of the hat coincides with the introduction of ungooey hair oils, while the rise of the mustache occurs at the same time that increasing use of drugs and alcohol by young men has them rising from bed too shaky to shave their kissable region without leaving ghastly scars. What we have is simply a natural response to changing technology, both cosmetic and narcotic. Why did hat and mustache flourish to gether at the start of the century? Well, the primitive state of the hair oil can be easily imagined, if not the terror of a mankind waiting for the safety razor to be invented.

Quebec's Far North: Land of the Broken Promise

By Christopher S. Wren New York Times Service

KUUJJUAQ, Quebec —
When 10,000 caribou drowned trying to ford the swol-len Caniapiscau River last September, the loss amounted to two years' supply of meat for the in-habitants of northern Quebec. But the ecological disaster created some temporary jobs for the local Eskimos, or Inuit, as they call themselves. About 160 of them were hired to clean up the carcasses. Steady work comes as scarce as trees in northern Quebec, a flat, mosquito-ridden expanse of bush and lakes the size of France.

"Sixty percent of employable people are not working at this time," said Willie Makiuk, a representative of the Kativik regional government, which looks after 5,500 Eskimos scattered in a dozen isolated settlements along the rocky northern coast.

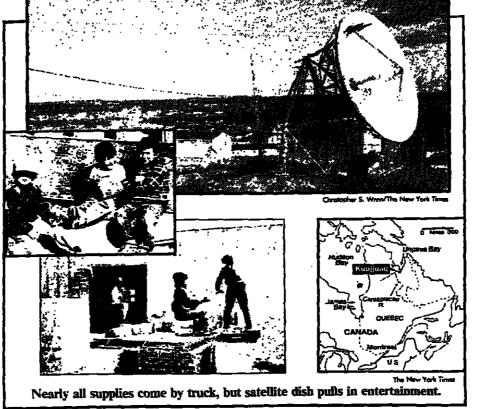

Such an unemployment rate is not much worse than in other pockets of poverty across Canada. But the Eskimos of northern Quebec have a particular grievance. Ten years ago, they signed away title to land for a major hydroelectric project near James Bay in return for assurances of a better life and millions of dollars in compensation.

The hydroelectric power is producing a profit for Quebec, but the Eskimos have yet 10 see a substantial improvement in their Kuujjuaq, which used to be called Fort Chimo, looks like a dusty frontier town. It lacks paved roads, running water and a sewage system, among other amenities. Most of the town's 1,100 residents drive battered pickup trucks and three-wheeled motorcycles, without license plates.

ern Canada, said the town's secretary-treasurer, Ian Robertson. Ottawa is aware of the conditions. Three years ago, the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs acknowledged in a report that there had been "serious problems" in trying to carry out the James Bay agreement, and it promised to do better.

Nor has Kuujjuaq benefited from being in the northern tip of the constituency of Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. In early July. Mulroney visited Kuujjuaq and seemed distressed by what he found. "We've failed seriously along the way, but I don't think it's because of any lack of optimism or any malice in the Canadian spirit," he assured constituents who turned out to greet him.

David Crombie, minister of Indian and northern affairs, visited Kuujjuaq later but nothing resulted, Mayor Johany Watt said. "I would like to see them pro-cash compensation it has received to find ways to create jobs. "The government has no imagination, so the ideas have to come from us," said Gordon, 31,an art school dropout who has helped lead the drive for Eskimo self-sufficiency in northern Quebec.

The corporation wants to set up a slaughterhouse to process and ship meat from the herd of 600,000 caribou that migrates across northern Quebec. So far provincial law forbids the commercial sale of game.

Makivik is also studying the feasibility of collecting and processing down from eider ducks in Hudson and Ungava bays. It wants to clear river channels to fish commercially for arctic char, which tastes much like salmon. An attempt at shrimp trawling in the Davis Strait off Greenland was abandoned after it lost several million dollars.

After a decade of waiting for the government, leaders like Gordon believe, the Eskimos of northern Quebec have to come up with their own solutions.

"At least three-quarters of the psychological problem is with the government and their righteous attitude." Gordon said. "They think they're doing you a big fa-vor providing welfare and housing. We are trying to change
